Keep them guessing

Sure, it's a novel method of investigation, but with the palace keeping mum on whether the Duchess of Cambridge is expecting a little prince or princess this month, we decided to take a closer look at the colour of Kate's pregnancy wardrobe. Of 31 outfits counted by WHO, it's boyish colours that have won out, 19 to 12. Yet, pinks—from soft pastel to bold cerise—have been prominent lately. So what does it all mean?

"I think she probably really wants a girl," says Majesty magazine's Ingrid Seward. "Of course, we all want a girl." Either way, cuteness guaranteed.

Happy Harry: the prince (on April 6 in Canberra) will train with an Indigenous unit in Darwin.

The popular royal (with fans in Canberra on April 6) will interrupt his Aussie tour to visit Gallipoli with father Prince Charles on Anzac Day.

Prince Harry's Charm

The royal wins over a Canberra crowd

WITH ONLY ONE official public engagement during his one-month secondment with the Australian Defence Force, Prince Harry made the most of it, charming crowds on a wet afternoon in Canberra. His mission? To bond with fellow redheads: "I got to shake his hand," said ginger-haired Ethan Toscan.

Toscan, 12, caught Harry's eye with a "Red Heads Rule!" banner during a meet-and-greet in the nation's capital on April 6. "He said that I was fabulous in making the sign and it's awesome to be a redhead," said the schoolboy. "I'm over the moon—it's just wow!"

As was Harry himself. Dressed in white and black ceremonial uniform, the prince—he will be known as Captain Wales for the remainder of his military-based trip—laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier during a visit to the Australian War Memorial.

Later, Harry, 30, spent 20 minutes talking with wellwishers who had braved the rain for a royal glimpse. The crowd were treated to high-fives, jokes and a plea for people to give up on "selfies." "Seriously, you need to get out of it," he told one teenager in a good-natured exchange. "I know you're young, but selfies are bad." ■

Prince Harry told Ethan Toscan being a redhead was "the No. 1 thing one person can ever be."

From toddlers ...

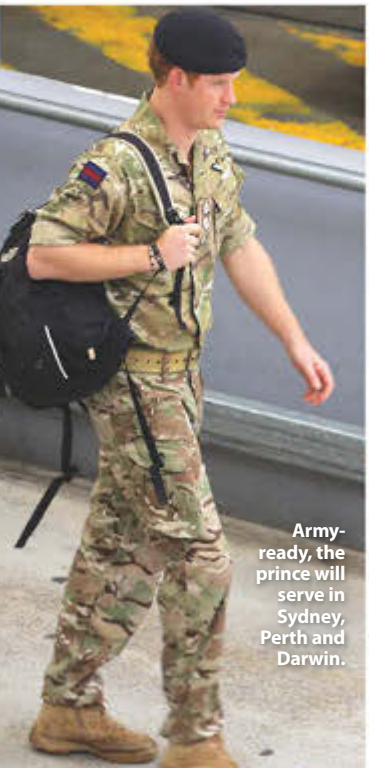

... to teenagers, Prince Harry was a crowd favourite.

On a more sombre note, the prince laid a wreath at the memorial before observing a minute's silence.

Army-ready, the prince will serve in Sydney, Perth and Darwin.

Harry landed at RAAF Base Fairbairn in Canberra on April 6.

The prince placed a poppy at the Roll of Honour.

PRINCE OF HEARTS

Paying his respects at the War Memorial, Prince Harry spent time looking at the names of those who died in Afghanistan, where he has twice served. His spokesman said a "challenging and hectic program" awaited him.

The new couple tried to avoid cameras as they left the April 2 show in West Hollywood.

Caught in the act! The Harris and Swift snuggle at the Haim concert, which set tongues wagging.

READY TO LOVE AGAIN?

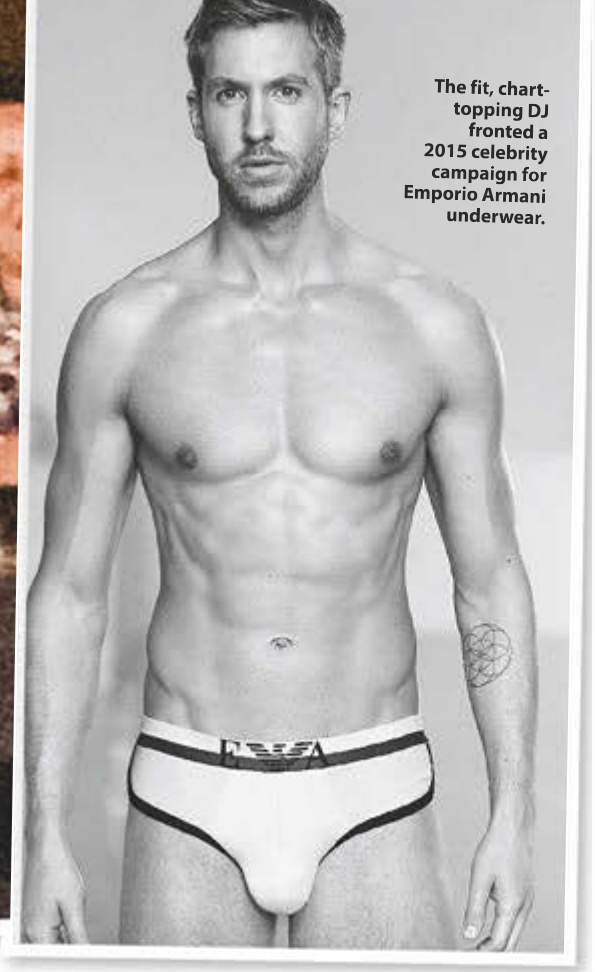

After suffering several public heartbreaks, Swift has been cautious about getting back into a relationship. "I used to think it was important to find a boyfriend," she said earlier this year. "But I don't feel that it is now."

SHE SAID SHE HAD A BLANK space and it seems Taylor Swift has written Calvin Harris's name there. The hitmaker, 25, and the Scottish DJ, 31, held hands leaving a concert by Swift's friends Haim in West Hollywood on April 2 after cuddling on a balcony. "He had an arm around her," says an onlooker, "and they looked very happy."

What's not to be happy about? While they've played it coy, the outing sparked buzz they are ready to go public. They were first said to have properly hung out backstage at the Brit Awards in Feb. 25 before Harris, who split with Rita Ora last year, was rumoured to have chartered a plane for the singer and her friends—including Selena Gomez and Ellie Goulding—to see his Las Vegas show. A few days later they were spotted shopping together at Whole Foods in Nashville before getting cosy at a Kenny Chesney concert on March 26.

The cat was well out of the bag by the time they hit the Haim gig, and while Swift (who has been linked to John Mayer and Taylor Lautner but has been happily solo since her split from One Direction's Harry Styles in January 2013) is saying nothing, a source close to her says things seem to be "getting serious" between the star couple. ■

BRUCE JENNER

Out of hiding

The transitioning star shows off a red manicure as a tell-all interview gets an air date

ON AN EASTER MONDAY HIKE IN MALIBU, Bruce Jenner paired his latest wardrobe staple—a black hoodie—with blue shorts and a bright red manicure. The photos of Jenner, who continues his transition from male to female, come as the US ABC network announced that news veteran Diane Sawyer's eagerly anticipated interview with the 65-year-old Olympic gold medallist will air on that TV network on April 24.

But another TV tell-all—a proposed E! docuseries about his transition—hangs in the balance. "Bruce's primary goal is to bring awareness to this issue to help others," a source tells WHO of the Kardashians' stepfather, who Radar Online claims is recovering from a recent breast-implant procedure . "He is not sure E! and a reality show is the best format to do that."

Jenner, the source added to WHO, "wants this to be taken seriously so that [his situation] can have the most positive impact on society's perception of the transgender community." ■

"He wants to marry her," a friend told WHO of Pattinson (with Twigs at Art Basel in Miami on Dec. 5). "They are inseparable when they are together."

APRIL FOOLING

"Added a little #AprilFools to my interview with Vulture Magazine today," T-Pain tweeted after letting the engagement cat out of the bag. "Check it out!!!"

Pre-Pattinson, Twigs (with her fiancé in Miami on Dec. 7) told The Guardian she'd had "two or three serious relationships."

Robert Pattinson & FKA Twigs

Engaged!

After a six-month courtship, RPatz and his squeeze are ready to wed—and for the pitter-patter of tiny Pattinsons

IT'S NEWS TO THROW THE toughest Twihard into a Twitter tantrum: Robert Pattinson is officially off the market. On April 1, WHO confirmed that the Twilight star is engaged to FKA Twigs, 27, the English singer RPatz has been dating since September—by last month, they were living together. "They get each other," says a Pattinson insider. "Everyone is really glad he's found someone who makes him so happy."

The couple are thinking of a northern summer wedding, reveals one source, though the date is "not definite." While Pattinson's parents, Richard and Clare, "would really like a church wedding," Twigs, who "really wants kids," says a source, "wants something quite informal, like a pub wedding."

Singer T-Pain was first to spill the beans, telling Vulture that Twigs was unable to contribute to his new album because "she's engaged now" to "ol' Patty ... I don't know if she wanted anybody to know that." He later tweeted it was an April Fool's prank.

Friends are thrilled for Pattinson, 28, after the messy end in 2013 of his romance with Twilight co-star Kristen Stewart. Twigs "has been really helpful, boosting his confidence," says the close source. "And he's protective of her when she gets heat for doing things her way." As for Stewart, 24, "she will survive Robert's engagement," says a friend. "She has her own life and has moved on." ■

Born Tahliah Barnett, Twigs (in a video for her 2014 single "Pendulum") has Jamaican and Spanish heritage and is keen to start a family.

Pattinson first split with Stewart (at the 2012 Teen Choice Awards) when she cheated on him with director Rupert Sanders.

'Bullying' TV tragedy

A doctor's sudden death is linked to—but not caused by—a Tina Fey show parody

Fredric Brandt (in New York in 2011) "always seemed like the life of the party," says a source.

Martin Short's Dr Grant "was making fun of [Brandt] for the way he looked," says a source.

REAL AND REEL

The Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt character Dr Grant (pronounced Franff), right, was reportedly modelled after Brandt, left. "It wasn't nice, what they did," says a source.

FOUND DEAD BY HIS housekeeper at his Florida home on April 5, famed dermatologist Fredric Brandt had apparently committed suicide, said Miami police. But sources close to the skin guru denied reports his death was caused by "bullying" by a Tina Fey TV show. "It definitely hurt him," an insider tells WHO. "But that was not why he committed suicide. He was depressed."

The Botox pioneer behind the Dr Brandt skincare line—he counted Madonna, Kelly Ripa and model Stephanie Seymour among his patients—Brandt was "hurt", says a source, by comparisons to a character on Fey's Netflix series Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt. "He was the nicest, kindest man," says his publicist Jacquie Tractenberg. "And they made fun of him. Does Tina Fey teach her daughter to make fun of people?"

While Fey, Netflix and Martin Short (who plays Brandt) have not yet commented, pals were quick to tweet about his death. "His loss will be felt for years," Ripa tells WHO. ■

TV's Dr Grant has a high-pitched voice and eccentricities.

"Dr Brandt was a true gentleman, an innovator and a friend," says TV host Ripa (with Brandt in 2011). She also tweeted "My heart is breaking."

MODEL MUM

Speaking to WHO during her pregnancy, "It's already changed me so much," said Trunfio of motherhood. "My focus, my view on things, my priorities, really taking life more seriously now and figuring out what's important."

Nicole Trunfio

Beach baby

The model wears first-time motherhood well

As a model, "I thought I'd be more sensitive to seeing my body change, but when I see myself through [fiancé] Gary's eyes, I have no issues," Trunfio (with her son in Byron Bay on April 5) told WHO last year.

FRESH FROM NEW YORK's chill to NSW's sunny Byron Bay to support fiancé Gary Clark Jr's set at the Byron Bay Bluesfest, Nicole Trunfio appeared in a state of baby bliss as she cradled their bouncing 3-month-old son at the beach on April 5. "We are so in love," the new mum posted to Instagram on Jan. 11, marking her new arrival with a photo of his tiny feet. While his name has yet to be released (Trunfio calls him "Baby Clark" on social media), "Everybody is healthy and happy," added the Perth-born model, "and the baby is as perfect as can be."

As is life these days for New York–based Trunfio, 29, who caught up with model pals Jessica Gomes and Gemma Ward in Byron Bay, and is relishing family life after a decade-long career as an international runway star and aspiring actress. She is set to wed US blues musician Clark Jr, 30, this year, and having kids was "something we've longed for ever since we met," Trunfio told WHO in November. "I feel like our child is going to learn so much from him. He's going to be the teacher and I'm going to be the nurturer." ■

Style star: "There were a lot of work opportunities I've had to dismiss, but I was so ready," says the new mother.

"Louis [Tomlinson, far left with 1D in South Africa on March 29] and Zayn are friends and will talk, but the rest probably won't," says a source.

Zayn's sad split

Malik leaves behind 1D —and some bad blood

WHEN ZAYN MALIK ANNOUNCED ON MARCH 25 that he was leaving One Direction after five years "to have some private time," his bandmates Harry Styles, Louis Tomlinson, Niall Horan and Liam Payne said they "totally respect" his decision: "We will always be friends." Behind the scenes, things are far less chummy. Spotted at a recording studio a day after the announcement, Malik has left some people "feeling a bit misled," says a source close to One Direction. "He told everyone he wants to live a normal life, and next thing you know, he's going into studios."

While Malik, 22, is working on solo music with producer Naughty Boy (who posted an alleged demo track featuring Malik before removing it from his SoundCloud page), the band are gearing up to record their fifth album as a foursome. Adds the source: "They don't want a Spice Girls situation, and having it all fall apart if one member leaves." ■

Before Malik (on Nov. 20 in Los Angeles) left the band, a source told WHO, "He finds the fame more difficult to deal with than the others."

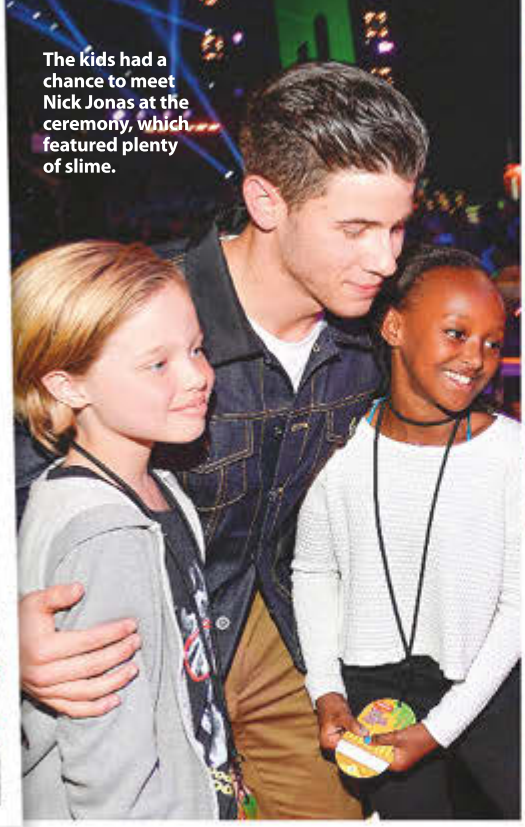

Malik (on a European getaway with fiancée Perrie Edwards on April 3) quit 1D's On the Road tour, following rumours he cheated on the Little Mix singer.

Time with her kids (at the Nickelodeon Kids' Choice Awards in LA on March 28) helps when Jolie is "stressed or has a lot on her mind," says a family source, "whether it's art projects, sports or just discussions."

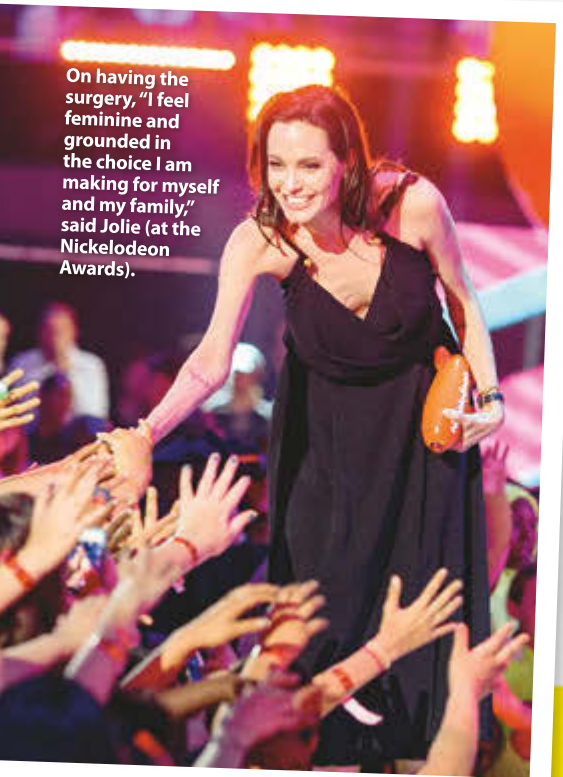

The kids had a chance to meet Nick Jonas at the ceremony, which featured plenty of slime.

Jolie's children are the "ultimate decision-makers in her life," says her doctor Kristi Funk. "She prioritises family above all else."

Angelina on top

After another cancer scare, the star celebrates with her girls

On having the surgery, "I feel feminine and grounded in the choice I am making for myself and my family," said Jolie (at the Nickelodeon Awards).

BEAMING IN A BLACK dress and high-fiving fans at the Nickelodeon Kids' Choice Awards in Los Angeles on March 28, Angelina Jolie showed the spirit that just days earlier led her to reveal she had undergone preventive surgery to remove her ovaries and fallopian tubes following an ovarian cancer scare.

Her dates for the night? Daughters Zahara, 10, and Shiloh, 8, who excitedly cheered on their mum as she gave a moving acceptance speech to the young crowd after claiming Best Villain (for Maleficent). "When I was little, like Maleficent, I was told that I was different. And I felt out of place—and too loud, too full of fire, never good at sitting still, never good at fitting in," said the Oscar winner. "And then one day I realised something, something that I hope you all realise: different is good."

In a second opinion piece for The New York Times (in 2013 the star revealed she'd had a double mastectomy after testing positive for a mutation in the BRCA1 gene), Jolie, 39, said the latest surgery was accelerated after a blood test showed inflammatory markers. "I told myself to stay calm, to be strong, and that I had no reason to think I wouldn't live to see my children grow up and to meet my grandchildren," she wrote. "To my relief, I still had the option of removing my ovaries and fallopian tubes and I chose to do it." ■

ALL ABOUT THE KIDS

"Brad makes sure she gets rest," says a source close to the family. "He is very protective and sometimes even has to force Angie to slow down."

Jolie (with Zahara and Shiloh) "doesn't like any fuss," a source tells WHO. "But you can tell she's relieved the cancer scare is over for now."

Robert's A-list 50th bash!

Robert Downey Jr celebrates a milestone with famous friends

ROBERT DOWNEY JR'S 50TH BIRTHDAY party was populated with more stars than most awards shows. The A-list guests, including Jennifer Aniston and Justin Theroux, Reese Witherspoon, Katie Holmes, Gwen Stefani, Gavin Rossdale and Orlando Bloom, gathered for the April 4 bash at Santa Monica's Barker Hangar. "It was the best party. Star-studded, of course, but it felt very intimate," a source tells WHO of the soirée, where Jeremy Renner, Dustin Hoffman, Edward Norton and Jason Bateman rounded out the impressive guest list.

Joined by his wife, Susan, the Iron Man star and his guests enjoyed jazz cocktails and hors d'oeuvres. While Holmes showed up sans sometime beau Jamie Foxx, the event was a date night for many of the couples: Gwyneth Paltrow was spotted getting cosy with Brad Falchuk (see p. 28), while engaged pair Aniston and Theroux shared sweet moments. "Jen and Justin looked happy and were very affectionate," the source adds. "They kept hugging and kissing." Love, it seems, was in the air. "Everyone seemed friendly," says the source. "And hugged each other left and right." ■

Survivors comforted each other on April 4. "Our nation is in a profound state of mourning following the heinous attack," said Kenyan President Kenyatta.

Mindless slaughter

Kenya's president promises swift justice after the university massacre that shocked the world

AS FAMILIES OF THE 148 VICTIMS OF the Kenyan university massacre grieved for their loved ones, the Kenyan government reacted swiftly. Within days of the bloody April 2 attack, authorities launched air raids on those believed to be behind the murders, wiping out two camps in Somalia belonging to Al-Qaeda-aligned terror group al-Shabaab.

"The two targets were hit and taken out, the two camps are destroyed," said army spokesman David Obonyo. In the meantime, Kenyans struggle to come to terms with the horror: witnesses have told how the gunmen lined up Christian students on the ground and shot them, and some victims were reportedly forced to phone their parents before being murdered.

With university students coming from all regions of the country, the massacre has sent ripples of grief throughout the entire nation. Announcing a three-day period of national mourning on April 4, Kenyan President Uhuru Kenyatta vowed the government would retaliate in the "severest way" to the "mindless slaughter."

"We shall employ all means at our disposal to bring the perpetrators to justice," he said. "We shall prevail." ■

Students in South Africa gathered on April 6 to commemorate those killed in the Kenyan massacre.

HIDING TO LIVE

AFTER HIDING IN A CUPBOARD, DRINKING body lotion and praying for her life, Cynthia Cheroitich's prayers were finally answered when rescuers found her two days after the killing spree. But the terrified student, 19, had to be convinced they were not gunmen masquerading as police. When the teenager, who had buried herself under piles of clothes as she listened to the screams of her colleagues, was finally coaxed out she told her rescuers: "I was just praying to my God."

Lara & Sam's BABY JOY!

True to his name, Rocket Zot arrived more than a week early, and his star parents are 'smitten'

"Lara's taken to motherhood like a duck to water," says a source close to Sam and Lara (leaving Cedars-Sinai hospital in Los Angeles with her baby on March 26).

FAMILY MATTERS

WHO's source says Lara's mother Sharon has been staying with the new parents, who, so far, have no extra help. "They haven't got a nanny or a night nurse," reveals the source. "I don't think they have plans to hire a full-time nanny."

They knew they were having a boy and had everything organised for his birth, but one thing Lara Bingle and Sam Worthington hadn't counted on? Their son's ahead-of-schedule arrival. Born more than a week before his due date, Rocket Zot Worthington, true to his name, was in a hurry: he came "very unexpectedly," a source close to his parents tells WHO. The newborn weighs "just six pounds [2.7kg]," adds the source. "He's tiny."

His parents, who have never publicly confirmed that they were expecting, are besotted with their son, who has blue eyes like his model/beauty entrepreneur mother, brown hair like his actor father, and a middle name that honours his maternal grandfather, Graham Bingle, who passed away in 2008 (see box). "They're both smitten with Rocket; they're madly in love with him."

> "They're both smitten with Rocket, madly in love"

Rocket—a name chosen because "they just liked it," says the source—was born between March 22 and 25 at the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. Lara, 27, gave birth naturally after an eight-hour labour, a hospital source tells WHO, with Sam, 38, and her mother, Sharon, in the delivery room. Rocket's

The couple (preparing to leave hospital with Sharon) "spent a bit of time trying to work out how to install the baby seat," an observer tells WHO.

KARL LARSEN/COLEMAN-RAYNER (4)

Lara (in Malibu on Feb. 28) "is really well and happy right now," says WHO's source.

"It's nice to be with someone who has my back," said Lara (on Malibu Beach with Sam on March 13). "He's a real man."

"What a legend," Josh Bingle captioned this photo of his dad (posted on Instagram in 2012).

ZOT'S IN A NAME?

Rocket's middle name is a loving tribute to Lara's father, Graham, who died aged 55 from liver cancer in May 2008, with Lara, her big brother, Josh, and their mother, Sharon, at his bedside in Sydney's Calvary Hospital. The model, who spoke of "the way he made people laugh, his kindness and thoughtfulness," later had "Wish you were here" tattooed on her wrist in remembrance. The landscape gardener was known as Zot.

On April 3, Lara lashed out on Twitter at "juvenile" media criticisms of the unusual name, pointing out that her choice was "a respectful nod to my late father, whose nickname was affectionately, Zot."

birth was "nothing out of the ordinary," says the first source, "a really good birth." As there were no complications, the first-time mum and her husband, who had been staying with her in the suite, were keen to check out, according to the source at Cedars-Sinai: "They wanted to be home pretty quickly."

Home for the next few months will be Sam's waterfront place in Malibu. Set to reprise his role of Jake Scully in Avatar, Sam will shoot the sequels in Los Angeles, "so it's all worked out nicely," says the source. "They're both really hands-on parents."

Almost from the day Sam met Lara—introduced by mutual friend Natalie Imbruglia in September 2013—he dubbed the Cronulla-born model his "wife." A year later, the pair stepped back from social media, Lara reserving hers mostly for business while Sam deleted his. The couple have never confirmed their secret wedding over the New Year period—although Lara hinted at it by changing her Instagram moniker to Bingle-Worthington in December.

With Rocket, their happiness is complete. Asked during an interview for Deadline Gallipoli what sort of father Sam would make, his co-star Jessica De Gouw described the Perth-raised actor and former nanny as "what you want in a dad." For her part, Lara, founder of the tanning and bronzing range The Base, said this year was going to be all about "family." She went on to describe herself on the Love Twain blog on March 30 as "empowered, homely, diligent."

Now, she might add overjoyed to that list. "I've never seen her this blissed-out. It's wonderful to see," says WHO's source. "She's happier than ever."

"Parenting, for them, will be a team effort," a source tells WHO of the new parents (driving home from the hospital on March 26). "Sam's very hands-on, as is Lara."

Near West Hollywood and Beverly Hills, Cedars-Sinai Medical Center has been the birthplace for celebrity babies including Harper Beckham and North West.

The children and their friends had a break from snorkelling to hang with dad Chris Martin.

Martin (with daughter Apple) took the children out on a boat to do some tubing.

"We laugh and we have fun," Paltrow told broadcaster Howard Stern.

Paltrow has said that she and Martin "have a really strong friendship."

Exes on holiday

One year on, Gwyneth and Chris are still close

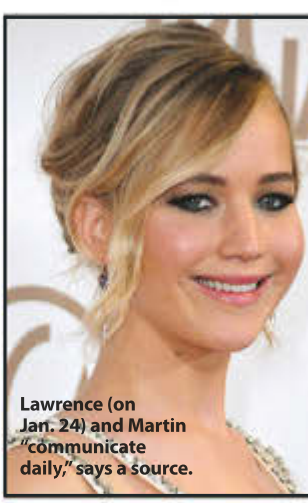

Paltrow (in Puerto Vallarta on April 1) has moved on with Glee co-creator Brad Falchuk. "They seem very happy to be together," says a source.

Who said breaking up is hard to do? One year after announcing they had "consciously uncoupled," Gwyneth Paltrow and Chris Martin spent five days together in a rental villa on a Mexican beach with their children, Apple, 10, and Moses, 8.

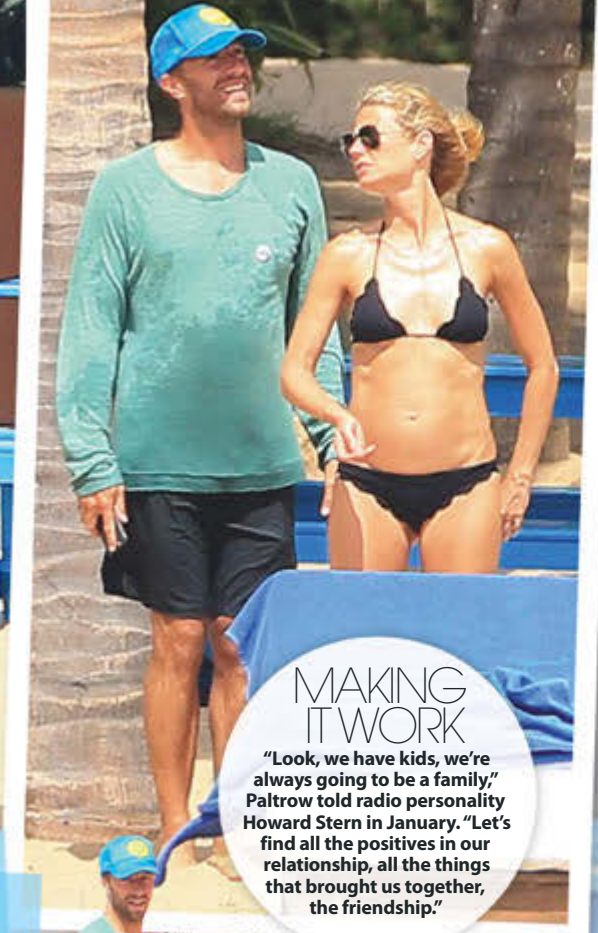

Strolling barefoot on the sand in Puerto Vallarta, bikini-clad Paltrow, 42, and Martin, 38, looked more like relaxed honeymooners than a pair on the verge of divorce.

But divorce they reportedly will —and soon. According to several sources, the couple have told lawyers to formalise custody arrangements for their children, and quietly divvy up their fortune.

After the beach break, Martin enjoyed a weekend with actress Jennifer Lawrence (see box), while Paltrow went public with TV-producer beau Brad Falchuk, 44, at Robert Downey Jr's 50th birthday bash on April 4 at the Barker Hangar in Santa Monica. "This is a natural evolution for Gwyneth and Chris as friends and as a couple," a source tells WHO of the "private" pair. "Between the two of them, there is no issue. They are good friends who respect one another deeply as parents." ■

Lawrence (on Jan. 24) and Martin "communicate daily," says a source.

MAKING IT WORK

"Look, we have kids, we're always going to be a family," Paltrow told radio personality Howard Stern in January. "Let's find all the positives in our relationship, all the things that brought us together, the friendship."

STILL GOING STRONG

After his family holiday, Chris Martin and his new love, Jennifer Lawrence, 24, spent a romantic Easter weekend in New York. The duo were spotted enjoying lunch at Tavern on the Green (roast beef sandwich for her, eggs benedict for him) and strolling in Central Park before heading to the Carlyle Hotel. It was the first public sighting of the pair since they helped celebrate Harry Styles's 21st birthday in Los Angeles on Jan. 31.

"They see each other when they can, yet each continues to do their own thing," a Martin source told WHO. "Both have full plates, and they like it that way."

"I'm proud of us for working through so much stuff together, and not blaming and shaming," Paltrow (with Martin) told Harper's Bazaar in January.

At home with BRITNEY SPEARS

‘I’m the happiest I’ve ever been’

With two rambunctious boys, a new boyfriend and a hit Las Vegas show, Britney Spears is loving her ‘blessed’ life

It’s a sunny March afternoon outside Britney Spears’s hillside mansion in Southern California, and the backyard antics are in full swing. With lightsabers in hand, the superstar’s sons—Sean Preston, 9, wearing an astronaut’s helmet, and Jayden James, 8, in a Darth Vader mask—happily spar on the grass. “Ohhhh, yesss!” yells Preston after he nails a front flip, landing on his feet near Jayden, who follows with a 360-degree break-dance-style spin on his back. Taking in the brotherly shenanigans, Spears smiles and at one point playfully scolds her boyfriend of six months, producer Charlie Ebersol, 32, when he swings Jayden up in the air beside the pool. “Baby, do not drop my son!” she says. The kids start to giggle.

Laughter is the norm these days around the Spears home. After more than 15 years as a pop star, the multi-platinum singer is on a roll—her long-running Las Vegas residency has grossed nearly $50 million in ticket sales in little more than a year. But while she loves performing, Spears’s true passion is being a mother. “My kids come first in my life, bottom line,” says Spears, 33. Her mother, Lynne, who visits from Louisiana each month, tells WHO, “I am so proud of my daughter and all her »

"Love and happiness" is what Spears wants most for her sons.

"They would describe me as very funny, sweet and loving," says Spears of sons Preston (centre) and Jayden (hanging out with Mum at home on March 11).

What advice would Spears give her teenage self? "Be strong," she says.

The kids love messing around on the half-pipe skateboard run in their backyard, which also boasts a pool, trampoline and jungle gym.

accomplishments, but I am especially proud of the mom she is and the woman she has become."

Finding a balance isn't always easy, but Spears is thankful she's able to enjoy both a booming career and a private life as a soccer mum, girlfriend and devoted daughter. She doesn't take any of it for granted: "I'm very, very blessed."

What's a normal day at home like?

"We get up and have breakfast. Eggs, bacon, croissants—yummy stuff. The kids just got into doing their hair and trying to be cool, which is really funny. Preston wants to be Justin Bieber, and Jayden has this whole Jim Carrey look. After school sometimes they'll go to gymnastics, which they love. Or I take them to the skate park. They're obsessed. We have a half-pipe at the house. They go to a really hard school, and this week we had three hours of homework [a night]. Some of it is hard for me. Next year when [Preston's] in fifth grade, he's going to be doing pre-algebra, and I'm taking classes so I know how to do it! Homework is a priority, and we have a reward system that helps motivate them: if they get so many As, they get one toy a month."

Describe their personalities.

"Preston is very opinionated, very expressive, and if he doesn't like something, he's going to tell you. But he has a huge heart, he's a good kid, and he has manners. It's been enlightening for me to see him growing and changing. Jayden is sweet, very soft-spoken, kinda funny. He's adorable—a mama's boy. They put their plates in the sink and wash them off; they take out the trash and help with the dogs. Preston just asked for a high allowance—like $10 a week or $20 a week—but we'll see."

How would you feel if they wanted to go into the entertainment business?

"They're not passionate about it.

BRITNEY'S FAVOURITE THINGS

SPA DAYS

"I love being pampered," says Spears, who enjoys regular facials, massages and manicures.

WORKOUTS

Yoga, swimming, running and hiking keep her fit. "I run not just for my body, but for my mental state," she says. "I like the way it makes me feel."

SPLURGE FOODS

Ice-cream (faves: pralines and cream and cookie dough), hot dogs and pizza ("I could live on it!") are guilty pleasures.

TV TIME

"I love Modern Family!" she says. "Charlie's into House of Cards, and the kids watch Impractical Jokers—I like that, too!"

WORK IT!

"I just think she's a really cool girl," says Spears (left, performing at Planet Hollywood in Vegas) of working with Iggy Azalea (right) on their upcoming single "Pretty Girls", out May 5. Other dream collaborations? Gwen Stefani, Katy Perry and Lady Gaga.

Ebersol (holding Jayden, with Spears and Preston) gets on well with Spears's children. "They relate to him really well," she says.

WHO IS CHARLIE EBERSOL?

The son of actress Susan Saint James and former NBC Sports chairman Dick Ebersol, Spears's beau is a successful producer active in charity work. Smitten with Spears, he tells WHO she has an "enormous heart."

Spears has a ball with her sons: "They're at the age where they're trying to be jokesters."

Spears calls Ebersol's first meeting with her sons at a neighbourhood restaurant "really beautiful."

If it's something they want to do in the future, I would try to steer them away from it. But if they really had a true love for it, then I would help them, since it's about what that little person wants for their life, you know?"

How is Charlie with them?

"They relate to him really well, and they have fun together. He's refreshing to be around and really lighthearted. My assistant introduced us. I saw a picture of him and I thought he was really adorable, and she said he was good people, so I went for it. For our first date he said, "What do you want to do?" and I said, "Cook for me," so he made fish, mushrooms, avocado with a dressing, and tomatoes and mozzarella. It was amazing. There was something about him that made me feel really peaceful and at ease. And he was really hot, too! Adorably hot. For my birthday we made waffles on the floor, with candles, and he bought me a real beautiful cake and a beautiful gift that I have on the wall. One of my favourite songs is "Thank U" by Alanis Morissette, and he put all the words to the song in a long frame. It was really thoughtful."

Would you get married again?

"I would love to. I believe in the fairytale. Love is a hard one. I don't really understand love as far as relationships. With my kids it's just unconditional, and that's hard to find. It takes two people just loving each other a lot. Unfortunately, I haven't been given that in a really long time. I'm not really the person to ask what it takes to get married, but personally, for me, it's about loving each other and communicating right and being respectful and honest."

> "I would love to get married again. I believe in the fairytale"

Are you open to having more kids?

"I would like to have one more. I am very satisfied with my two boys, but maybe in the future I would love a mini-me. That would be fun!"

Things seem great for you right now.

"I'm in a real good place in my life. I have a great show, and I'm able to be off every six weeks and I get to indulge in my kids. I get summers off, so we can do fun things like have barbecues. The boys are in such a good stage in their lives. They're able to think for themselves and are becoming little people. It's fascinating. I'm the happiest I've ever been. My priorities are straight: making family No. 1 and being consistent with that and having God in my life."

Did you ever think you'd be this happy?

"No, never. Not in my wildest dreams."

GERMANWINGS TRAGEDY

INSIDE HIS DARK SECRETS

Andreas Lubitz only ever wanted to fly. So what led him to deliberately plunge Germanwings Flight 9525 into the French Alps with 149 innocent people aboard?

Lubitz (in San Francisco) was "friendly," a neighbour tells WHO.

The alpine village of Le Vernet set up a memorial for the victims of Lubitz.

To neighbours in Montabaur, in central Germany, Andreas Lubitz was the nice guy from down the road, as generous with a smiling "Hallo!" as he was with advice for others looking to turn a love of flying into a career. "I want to become a pilot, too, and Andreas was supernice, offering me a lot of details about it," Konstantin Keidel, 20, tells WHO. Adds another from his home town, Johannes Rossbach: "Andreas was friendly on the surface and seemed normal and happy."

But beneath his sunny profile, the 27-year-old Lubitz harboured a much darker side. According to reports that seem to turn up new, disturbing information daily, Lubitz suffered from depression, suicidal tendencies and nightmares. On April 5, it emerged Lubitz had recently searched on the internet "bipolarity" and "manic depression," and ways to commit suicide. These secrets are only now coming to light as shocked, heartbroken families from 18 countries, including Australia, mourn loved ones suddenly and senselessly gone—and struggle to understand how the young copilot who giddily flew gliders as a teenager became the man who authorities believe flew himself and 149 innocents aboard Germanwings Flight 9525 to their deaths in a remote part of the French Alps. "Something like this goes beyond anything we can imagine," said German Chancellor Angela Merkel.

The Airbus A320—flying under Lufthansa's budget Germanwings airline—was travelling from Barcelona to Düsseldorf when it slammed into the mountains on March 24, killing all aboard. The flight's final moments, revealed on the plane's cockpit recordings, are horrifying: Lubitz encouraging his pilot, Capt Patrick Sondheimer, to use the bathroom; the sound of Lubitz locking the door behind the captain; minutes later, Sondheimer banging and shouting, "For God's sake, open the door!"; loud, metallic bangs heard against the door as Sondheimer tried to break through; the sound of Lubitz's breathing, seemingly calm and unperturbed, as the plane headed directly towards oblivion. Then, in the final seconds, the sounds of passengers screaming, as they presumably saw the mountains looming, then silence. "We have to accept that a plane was crashed on purpose," says Lufthansa CEO Carsten Spohr.

> —Lufthansa's CEO

As authorities investigate the tragedy, a picture has emerged of a young man whose life was coming apart. After raiding the Düsseldorf flat Lubitz shared with his girlfriend (he also reportedly kept a room at his parents' home), police discovered antidepressants and multiple doctors' notes excusing Lubitz from flying—including one for March 24, the day of the crash, which the copilot had torn up. German prosecutors say Lubitz's flight training was interrupted six years ago for unknown reasons and that he had received psychotherapy for "suicidal tendencies" for several years before becoming a pilot in 2013. He was subsequently deemed "100 per cent flight-worthy without any limitations," said Lufthansa's Spohr.

Under Germany's strict medical privacy laws, Lubitz was expected to self-report any mental illness.

That was unlikely, given what a former

'THE STUDENTS WERE FLYING HOME'

Sixteen 14- and 15-year-olds and their two teachers from a school in Haltern am See, Germany, almost missed their doomed flight home after nine days living with host families in Barcelona. Anna Garcia, one of the Spanish students in the exchange program, told local media, "One of the German girls left a bag with all her travel documents at her host family's home. So they didn't hold the rest of the group up, the family took her to the airport and she was able to board the plane."

"They were flying home after having what was probably the most wonderful time of their lives," said Sylvia Loehrmann, a German state education minister.

Flowers and candles piled up at the Haltern am See High School on March 25.

girlfriend known only as "Maria W" told the German tabloid Bild: that Lubitz worried about "health problems" dashing his dream of being a Lufthansa captain, and that he told her, "One day I'm going to do something ... and everyone will know my name and remember." She also said that Lubitz would sometimes awake screaming, "We're going down!"

He reportedly sought treatment for trouble with his eyesight, though investigators later said they found no evidence of vision problems, suggesting it could have been psychosomatic. On top of these worries, his romantic life had grown complicated and his spending was erratic. Lubitz's long-term girlfriend, a school teacher, may be pregnant, according to reports. And just weeks before the crash, Lubitz bought two Audis.

> "Everyone will know my name and remember"
> —Andrea Lubitz

Now, his parents and girlfriend are among the people making the terrible pilgrimage to the crash site. "His girlfriend is obviously very upset," Konstantin Keidel tells WHO. "It's such a shock. He was just so normal." Lubitz's father, a businessman, "is completely shattered" by what his son did, Bernard Bartolini, mayor of nearby Prads-Haute-Bléone, told France's BFM-TV. Another father, Robert Tansill Oliver, whose son Robert Oliver Calvo was aboard Flight 9525, found sympathy amid his own pain. "I'm really sad for the parents of that young pilot," Oliver says. They, too, "are hurting."

Authorities scour the crash site in Seyne, France, on March 25.

THE FINAL MINUTES

10.01 AM

Flight takes off from Barcelona, about 20 minutes behind schedule.

10.27 AM

Jet reaches cruising altitude of 11,500m. Capt Patrick Sondheimer gives command to copilot Lubitz and leaves the cockpit.

10.29 AM

Lubitz begins an unapproved, straight-line descent. Capt Sondheimer tries to get back into the flight deck but can't. He knocks and bangs on the door.

10.31 AM

Jet begins descending at a rate of more than 900m per minute.

10.32–10.40 AM

Alarms sound, and Capt Sondheimer is heard trying to break through the cockpit door. Lubitz does not respond, although his breathing can be heard on the cockpit voice recorder. The cries of passengers can also be heard.

10.40 AM

Investigators think they hear the plane's right wing scrape a mountaintop.

10.41 AM

The plane crashes into a mountainside in Southern France.

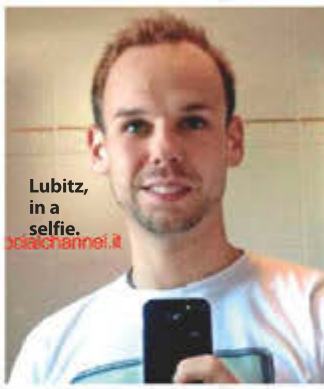

"It's so tragic, so sad, so unfathomable," said German state education minister Sylvia Loehrmann of the 14 students and two teachers who died in the crash.

An investigator removed belongings from Lubitz's parents' home where Lubitz lived in Montabaur, Germany, on March 26.

A NEW DANGER?

In the past, pilots admitting to any mental illness were grounded. But in recent years, with better understanding of psychiatric health, that policy has been replaced with an honour system of self-reporting that now has experts questioning if airlines and regulators are doing enough to keep fliers safe. "Self-reporting is not enough and not OK," says J. Reid Meloy, a forensic psychologist specialising in threat assessment. Aside from the fact that a mentally ill pilot is an unreliable judge of his own impairment, Meloy says assessments need to be ongoing, with doctors in "close consultation" with aviation authorities. Privacy, he says, cannot "trump public safety."

'CRIPPLED WITH SADNESS'

The deaths of a Melbourne mother and son on board German-wings Flight 9525 have left their family "crippled with sadness." Australian nurse Carol Friday, 68, and her son Greig, 29, were taking a European holiday before Greig was due to begin teaching English in France. "Our family is in deep disbelief," read a family statement. "They were both extraordinary and exceptional people who were loved by many, who they loved in return. They will forever be with us in our hearts, memories and dreams." Said Carol's brother Mal Coram, who visited the crash site with his children: "I now know the true meaning of the words grief-stricken."

The 1996 launch of Australian Fashion Week—the brainchild of then-PR consultant Simon Lock—drew mixed reviews; despite shows by acclaimed local designers Alex Perry, Akira Isogawa and Wayne Cooper, UK fashion writer Susan Owens dubbed it "Fashion Weak." But 20 years on, the event has launched careers (Ellery, Dion Lee, Lily Cole), seen unknowns Lara Bingle and Kim Kardashian mingle and created controversy (live rats on runways). Lock, author of In the Front Row: How Australian Fashion Made the World Stage (MUP, $34.99), and other major players look back on Fashion Week's most memorable moments.

1997 ALEX PERRY

Supermodel LInda Evangelista beamed with designer Alex Perry, but "the smile on Linda and Alex's faces had nothing to do with the drama backstage when Linda was an hour late, and eventually had to be sewn into the dress and then told by Alex that he didn't think she was that pretty anyway and what was all the fuss about," Lock recalls. "Diva drama, indeed!"

2001 TSUBI

The label's debut show drew controversy after models picked their way down a runway dotted with 200 live rats. "Buyers and media were screaming as they curled up on their seats like children!" Lock remembers.

2010 DION LEE

"Dion's debut at the Sydney Opera House was in perfect alignment with his architecturally inspired silhouettes," says Lock.

2000 C. DESIGN

"Classic Megan [Gale]. Her natural assets are only matched by just how lovely she is to work with," says Lock. "Always a fan."

2002 ELLE MACPHERSON

"Finally, after six years planning, The Body made her first and only appearance at Fashion Week. It was worth the wait," says Lock of the show featuring pole-dancing models in Elle Macpherson Intimates.

"This was the first time I put my hand to pastels, flowers and luxury flowing fabrics," said Brown of her 2010 collection, modelled by Nicky Hilton.

"She was an über-cool bitch," said Brown of Jade Jagger (in 2004), who had said, "I really don't know very much about Australian fashion, but I think it's meant to be quite relaxed."

Giuliana Rancic tells WHO 'My Tough

The E! host opens up about her 'Fashion Police' controversy, her secret health

"Bill and I are the closest we've ever been," says Rancic (with their son, Duke, earlier this year). "As long as my family is happy, everything else is a bonus."

Giuliana Rancic has revealed intimate moments and bared plenty of private heartache on her reality-TV series, Giuliana & Bill. But when the Twittersphere erupted over her drastically thinner appearance at the Golden Globes on Jan. 11, the E! News anchor and Fashion Police co-host kept the pain she felt to herself. "I was so shocked," she says. "You don't say to someone, 'You look so disgusting, you must have an eating disorder.' If someone really thought I had an eating disorder, what a horrible way to approach it! It was very hurtful."

Now, for the first time, she has decided to address the issue head-on—as well as to open up about that other media firestorm: the uproar following her post-Oscar Fashion Police quip that Zendaya, who sported long dreadlocks on the red carpet, probably smelled of "patchouli oil and weed." After Zendaya spoke out against what she felt were "ignorant slurs," Rancic says she began "getting death threats," and within weeks her Fashion Police co-hosts Kelly Osbourne and Kathy Griffin resigned, both referencing their discomfort with the show's direction. (It is on hiatus.) Through it all, Rancic, 40, whose new memoir, Going Off Script, is out this month, has tried hard to hold on to her naturally sunny outlook. "Whatever happens, good or bad, there is a purpose that will ultimately expose itself," she says. "That philosophy hasn't failed me yet."

> "I look in the mirror and it's hard for me. I am really thin"

So what is going on with her weight? Rancic says she is fully aware that it's a problem. "I think now is a good time to address it, because it's really gotten out of hand," she says. "I never want my weight to distract people from my work." But she insists it's not about what she does or doesn't eat. After undergoing a double mastectomy in 2011, she began taking a commonly prescribed breast cancer drug to help prevent a recurrence and soon noticed that she started losing weight, she says. "I was eating a lot, so I was concerned." (Her oncologist, Dr Dev Paul, of Rocky Mountain Cancer Centers in Denver, told her that the drug, which can alter the metabolism, potentially has that effect.) Also contributing to her thinness, Rancic believes, is the stress she has been under since she and her husband, Bill, 43, received a devastating personal blow in December. The couple, whose E! reality-TV show chronicled an emotional struggle with infertility (their son, Duke, 2, was born via surrogate), had been hoping to expand their family. Instead, New Year's Eve brought the news that their surrogate had again miscarried (the first miscarriage was recounted on the show in 2014). Now, the Rancics had run out of embryos. "We were so optimistic about the last embryo," says Rancic. "It was really tough news to be dealt."

But the TV host is nothing if not determined to keep moving forward with her life. In her new book she reveals that she suffered from debilitating scoliosis as a teen that deeply scarred her self-image (see box overleaf). "It's very hard to camouflage, and it's all you think about all day, every minute of the day," she says, her problem—and why she is shockingly thin

"Whatever happens, good or bad, there is a purpose that will ultimately expose itself," Rancic says.

eyes welling at the memory. "I was always hoping that someday someone would tell me I was pretty. And I just wasn't."

Surgery at age 21 straightened her curved spine, and the fiercely ambitious Rancic managed to successfully pursue a career in front of the camera. But the emotional damage—and the bony shoulders her Globes dress highlighted—remain. "I'm shaped a certain way because of the scoliosis," she says. "Even if I gained 20 pounds [9kg], the bones in my back would still look the way they do."

For the next seven years, until she is finished taking the cancer medication, gaining weight may not be easy. "I look in the mirror and it's hard for me," she concedes. "I am really thin. I want to look fit and beautiful and sexy and curvy, and I can't." A recent home-video she posted received more than 1,000 comments, she says, »

"There were all sorts of problems" with the show, says Rancic (left, with co-hosts Griffin, Osbourne and Brad Goreski).

EVER THINNER

"I've been told I'm too thin even when I'm 10 lb [4.5kg] heavier," says Rancic, who was "shocked" by the online debate after her appearance at the 2015 Golden Globes (right). "But weight is very personal. You never know what anyone is going through."

most of them lambasting her "horrible" appearance. "I'm sorry that people think I'm disgustingly skinny, as they put it, but there's nothing I can do. I eat a very robust, healthy, balanced diet. I eat dessert almost every night. But I'm on cancer medication. I'm doing the best that I can."

Rancic hopes her explanation will quiet at least some of her critics and that the Zendaya incident and the threats it inspired will fade into the past as well. "People were sending me pictures of the barrel of a gun," she recalls. "It was horrifying." She apologised to Zendaya, but says the joke she made about patchouli and weed—which she didn't write—was taken out of context, so its true meaning was obscured. "It was a reference to hippie culture," Rancic says. "I made peace signs, I said 'boho' twice. But that was edited [out]. I'd say there were 50 sets of eyeballs on-set that day, and not one person thought it had the [racist] undertones that it ended up having once it aired. I felt horrible."

She is looking forward to Fashion Police's return later in the year and insists there's no bad blood between her and her former co-stars Osbourne and Griffin. "Fashion Police without Joan [Rivers, who died in September] was difficult from Episode 1. It was never quite gelling. I really believe that it was only a matter of time before that specific show with that cast and that format fell apart."

And she is concentrating on enjoying her family. "Bill and I are so in love," she says. "Every night we get on our knees and pray together, and it's really nice." Watching his wife endure the barrage of public criticism has been hard for Bill. "It's been heartwrenching," he says. "But she's stronger than I ever imagined she would be."

> "I wake up and I make the choice to be happy"

In fact, Rancic has retained an admirable perspective on life's adversities. "I could easily get bogged down in a funk every day, especially with everything I've been through the past few years," says Rancic, who still hopes to grow the family, perhaps through adoption. "But every morning I wake up and I make the choice to be happy. Everything I went through has gotten me to where I am today, and I love where I am today. I have an amazing husband and a beautiful baby. I have an incredible life."

■ By Aili Nahas

"I always wore baggy clothes," says Rancic (at age 14).

AN EMOTIONAL SECRET

When I was 13 an orthopaedist confirmed the school nurse's finding: I had scoliosis. I was no longer just skinny and awkward: I was crooked. As I hit puberty my right hip rose higher than the other, jutting out at an angle. One side of my chest protruded, which may have been less noticeable if I were curvy to begin with, but that wasn't the case, so I would stuff my bra with Kleenex to even things out into something that did not look like 32A through a fun-house mirror. Every day the first thing on my mind was how to fool everyone into thinking I was straight. I learned to camouflage my misshapen body by casually leaning against the walls, so the jutting hip became part of a contrived slouch. "Stand up straight!" I was forever being urged by people who had no idea I couldn't. "Oh, whatever, I'm just tired," I would shrug.

I actually envied classmates who were overweight or had to wear thick glasses. Every autumn, a lucky few would return to high school a social caste or two higher than the semester before after losing weight or getting contacts or finding a good dermatologist over the summer. But scoliosis was a different level of ugly.

I masked my deep insecurity by becoming the funny chick, every guy's pal but never more. I imagined the surprise and disgust a guy would feel when he felt my jutting shoulder blades, or put his hands on my hips to draw me closer. It was much easier to suck down the loneliness and let everyone run with the assumption I was playing hard to get.

Weirdly enough, for all my insecurity and self-consciousness, still burning inside me was that same stubborn conviction I'd had since the age of 7, that I was meant to be on camera. I wanted everyone to look at me; I just didn't want anyone to see me.

Animal victims of Cyclone Pam urgently need your help

Food is predicted to run out for both people and animals, and that, along with providing shelter and emergency medical care are the priorities for helping survivors. We are working hard to get critical medicine and veterinary supplies shipped in from New Zealand.

The time to help is now as the needs are being described as "unimaginable." Please donate to help us secure more medicine, food and shelter materials so we can make sure the animals receive the care they need alongside the people in this nightmare.

"The scenes of devastation in Vanuatu are heartbreaking. It's unimaginable what those people and their animals have been through. Now they face a gruelling recovery...but they don't have to do it alone."

The Sound of Music turns 50!

The hills are alive—forever! Julie Andrews and Christopher Plummer share memories of making the classic 1965 movie musical

A LITTLE DIRECTION

"He was a darling guy," says Andrews of director Robert Wise (on-set with the children). "You can tell he's adorable. And little Kym [Karath], who's so young. Well, we all were."

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT: AUSTRALSCOPE; EVERETT COLLECTION/HEADPRESS; 20TH CENTURY FOX (4); VERETT COLLECTION/HEADPRES

A STAR IN THE MAKING

Andrews checked her makeup between takes. The actress wasn't famous yet, as Mary Poppins hadn't hit cinemas. "I was so green!" she says.

HERE COMES THE BRIDE

"That dress was exquisite," says Andrews of Maria's gown. "It was shot in the abbey and on the sound-stage—the walk across the courtyard was Hollywood, and the actual church was Salzburg [Austria]."

THE ROLE OF A LIFETIME

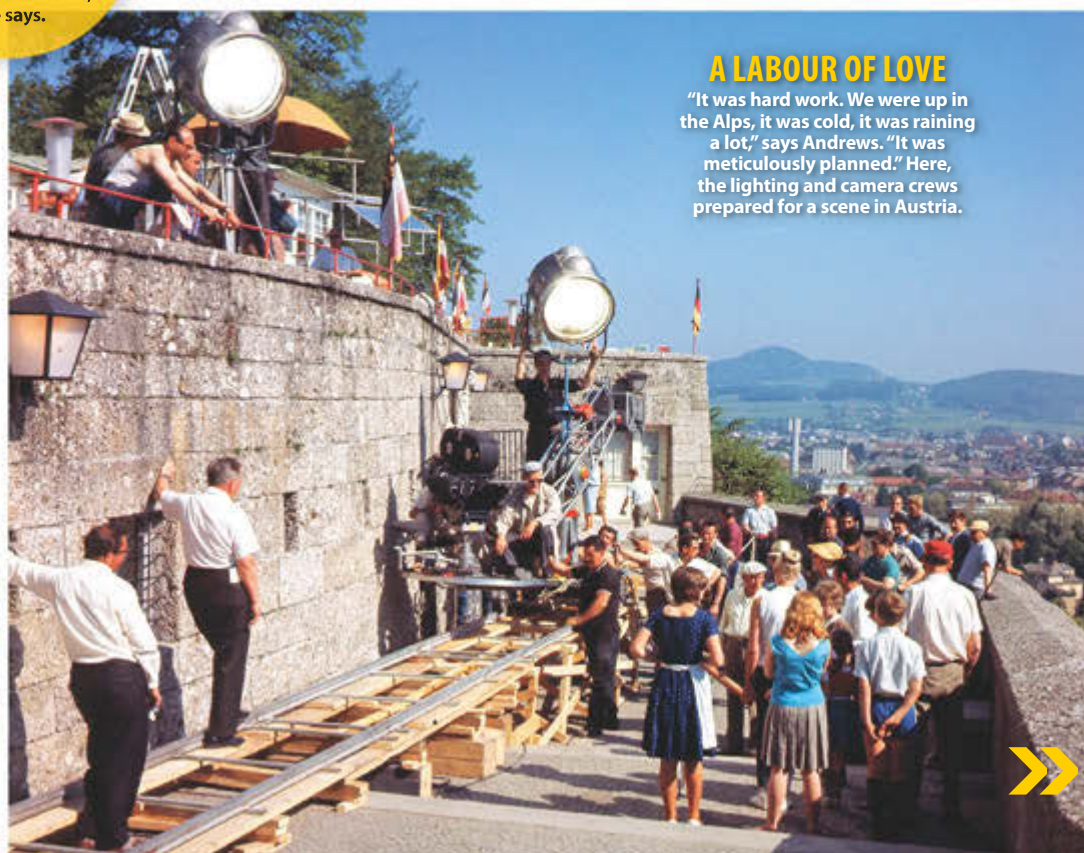

Andrews "clowning around" out of costume. "I never could have guessed the movie would be this iconic," she says.

SISTERHOOD ON-SET

Karath took a break with Charmian Carr. Andrews was surprised "how quickly the cast bonded as a family. We're still that family."

A LABOUR OF LOVE

"It was hard work. We were up in the Alps, it was cold, it was raining a lot," says Andrews. "It was meticulously planned." Here, the lighting and camera crews prepared for a scene in Austria.

THINGS ON STRINGS
The famed Salzburg Marionette Theatre inspired the puppetry in "The Lonely Goatherd" scene.

PYJAMA GAME
She prepped to sing "My Favourite Things" with director Wise. "I remember him telling me what he wanted."

"The ultimate memory is one of beauty and joy—just making it"
—Julie Andrews

MAMA MARIA
Andrews checked out the latest Hollywood news with her daughter Emma.

'How Lucky Can a Girl Get?'

Like the governess she played in The Sound of Music, Julie Andrews needed to win over seven young people. On the first day of shooting, "I wanted to make the kids feel as much at home as possible," the star, 79, tells WHO. Andrews had just played the title character in Mary Poppins, "so they asked me if I could sing 'Supercalifragilistic,' and I did," she recalls. "Then they asked me to sing it backward, which I did. They loved it."

Andrews's soaring soprano and twinkling charisma propelled the musical to a Best Picture Oscar—and, following her own Best Actress win for Mary Poppins a year earlier, cemented her Hollywood superstar status at age 29. "I think people assume I chose [to play Maria], but I wasn't in a position to do that," she says, noting that before Sound of Music she was best known as a stage performer. "They asked me, and then I became a part of history," she marvels. "How lucky can a girl get?"

Following the film's massive success—its anniversary is being celebrated with a new Blu-ray and DVD edition, out on April 22—Andrews earned a third Oscar nod for 1982's Victor Victoria, directed by her husband, Blake Edwards. (They were married for 41 years until his death in 2010.) She also focused on her family life, raising five children. "Being a mum," she told WHO in 2012, "always seemed to me like putting in pieces of the puzzle that you never quite knew."

The actress faced one of the biggest personal and professional challenges of her life in 1997, when botched throat surgery permanently took her famed four-octave singing voice. "I thought at the time my voice was what I am—and it is to some extent," she says, "but it seems it's not all that I am."

These days, she writes children's books with her daughter Emma Walton Hamilton—"I seem to be busier than I've ever been"—and she savoured the warm reception she received at the Oscars' Sound of Music tribute alongside Lady Gaga in February. "Lady Gaga hit it out of the ball-park," she says. Overall, "it's a lovely time in my life. I have gorgeous grandchildren and a home I adore. I don't think things could be better than that."

KIDDING AROUND

The children used their downtime to do homework or work on dialogue, says Andrews. Far left: Nicholas Hammond and Duane Chase on the Fox lot in Los Angeles.

THE KIDS THEN & NOW

LEARNING TO RESPECT HIS ROLE

Christopher Plummer, now 85, concedes that for years he was a bit "thankless" about having played Captain von Trapp. "I didn't think the part was the greatest ever written," says Plummer, who won an Oscar for Beginners in 2012. But he now has "a great respect for it. It's a terrific picture of its time." And he enjoyed more than the crisp apple strudels. His fondest memory: "Getting to know Austria and getting to know some Austrian girls—they're very beautiful!" ■

THEY'RE HEROES to me

Decades after they first inspired him, Ben Roberts-Smith tells the stories of Gallipoli's 10 Victoria Cross recipients in a TV special close to his heart

"I just kept thinking, 'I could take 10 of my mates and put them back in those trenches and they would have behaved the same—the same jokes, the same courage,'" says Roberts-Smith (on location in Gallipoli). "That was really inspiring."

"She was just glad that we all came home," said Roberts-Smith of meeting the Queen in November 2011, 10 months after being awarded his Victoria Cross.

As a little boy carrying a mighty dream, Benjamin Roberts-Smith visited the Australian War Memorial in Canberra, where voices from the past whispered tales of extraordinary courage, camaraderie and sacrifice. Learning about Anzacs awarded the Victoria Cross—our highest military honour—for acts of bravery at Gallipoli left an indelible impression on the 12-year-old who had "wanted to be a soldier since day one," he tells WHO. "I read their stories and got an understanding that these were the epitome of soldiering," says Roberts-Smith, who would go on to earn his own Victoria Cross for actions against the Taliban in 2010. "These were the guys that stood out amongst some pretty amazing people."

Twenty-five years later, in the lead-up to the April 25 centenary of the Gallipoli landings, the former Special Air Service Regiment corporal is paying homage to those heroes who so fired up his youthful imagination. In the two-part special Sunday Night: The Power of Ten (airing on April 12 at 8.30 PM on Seven), Roberts-Smith follows in the footsteps of the 10 Anzacs who received the highest honour. Three years in the making, the project was a personal quest for the war hero who came up with the idea "to tell the story of Gallipoli, but through a very personal lens—through the eyes of these individuals," he explains. "It was important to me to show them as men, because the reality is we were all just blokes."

As Roberts-Smith, 37, who lives in Brisbane with his wife, Emma, and their twin daughters, Eve and Elizabeth, 4, travelled throughout NSW and Victoria, and to Auckland, London and Turkey to meet descendents of the men, he experienced profound moments of insight linking him to his comrades from another era. "It was emotive, there's no getting away from that," he says, describing a "surreal" experience (see box) interviewing the elderly daughter of Cyril Bassett, the first New Zealander to be awarded a VC.

In the feats of Sydney carpenter Alfred Shout, Roberts-Smith saw echoes of the "larrikinism that's still very much a part of soldiering today," he says. "Everybody said Alfred was just nonstop cracking jokes. A bomb had literally torn off half his face and half an arm ... and he still sums up the energy to look up to the boys in the trenches and say, 'Don't worry about it, lads, go and get 'em. I'll be back in a minute.'"

> "None of them were thinking about themselves"

Though near death, Shout's determination to "try to inspire his mates" to the end is "something that resonated with me," says Roberts-Smith. He shifts the focus off himself when reflecting on the operation in Afghanistan on June 11, 2010, that led to his VC: "I went and did what everybody else did. I fought as hard as I could because I loved the job, loved my country. For whatever reason, I happen to be the one singled out."

During that mission, Roberts-Smith was "part of an SAS troop of about 20 men who carried out a mission to capture or kill a Taliban commander in Kandahar province," he told WHO in 2012. "From my perspective, it was certainly about what my whole team achieved that day; you can't fly into battle alone."

Across the divide of time, it's a truth he is certain would be shared by the 10 soldiers he celebrates now. "None of them were thinking about themselves, none of them were thinking about the VC, none of them were thinking about medals, all of them were thinking about just trying to win the day to keep their mates alive."

The driving force is "a passion that leads to belief in what you're doing," says Perth-born Roberts-Smith, who remembers "being a little kid playing with plastic soldiers" years before that momentous visit to the War Memorial: "It sounds very corny, but it was something I was destined to do." In 2013, the same year he was named Australian Father of the Year, new challenges beckoned for the in-demand leadership speaker and charity patron, and he retired from the army to pursue a career in business (he is hoping to finish his MBA this year).

"I get peace knowing I can leave that part of my life behind and know I gave it 100 per cent," says Roberts-Smith of his army career. "That's what I set out to achieve because I was inspired by these guys and what they achieved. They're still heroes to me as much as when I first read their stories."

■ By Karina Machado

Meeting Anzac hero Cyril Bassett's daughter Beverley Young (at home in Bowral, NSW) was "quite special," says Roberts-Smith.

OUT OF THE PAST

Bassett "never spoke about the war or his achievements," his daughter Beverley has said.

Interviewing Beverley Young, 80, the youngest daughter of VC hero Cyril Bassett, "was probably one of the most enlightening experiences of my time post-VC," says Power of Ten host Roberts-Smith. "She started to get quite emotional about how her father was very strict with them," he recounts. "She was saying, 'He would never talk to us, he'd never say that he loved us.' This is hard to explain, but it was like putting myself in a position where I could be listening to my daughters in 100 years ... It was teaching me that I need to be cognisant of how I am with my family because this is how it could be. It was like a window into the future."

Roberts-Smith's wife, Emma, and their twins, Eve and Elizabeth, "are the most important thing in my life," he told WHO.

REDFERN NOW

THE STORY W HAD TO TELL

The action is tense while filming, but "there's always great camaraderie on set," says Deborah Mailman (centre). "It's hard not to have a good laugh with them mob."

"We're definitely going out with a bang," says Hick (right, filming a pivotal scene in Sydney's Kings Cross).

"Deb has so much experience, it's inspiring to watch her and learn," says Hick (right). Mailman (second from left) returns the compliment: "Rarriwuy's such a stunning actress, and she's such a smart woman. She's got so much ahead of her."

RETURN TO REDFERN?

Since the cast and crew filmed Redfern Now: Promise Me, the ABC has hinted that it might bring it back in the future. "I love to hear they might be reconsidering," says Mailman. "I think there's a lot of support around to keep it going."

Filming at the Block in Redfern was great, said Mailman: "Redfern has such a vibrant community—hopefully it's shifted opinions about it."

Deborah Mailman and the cast of the award-winning 'Redfern Now' return with a shocking and powerful tale in one final telemovie instalment

When three Aboriginal girls can't get a taxi after a night of dancing in Sydney's Kings Cross, they end up walking home to Redfern—a decision that has horrific consequences for one of the three, Robyn, played by Rarriwuy Hick, in the final telemovie instalment of Redfern Now, titled Promise Me (Thurs., April 9, at 8.30 PM on ABC). "It happens, more than we care to acknowledge," Deborah Mailman, who reprises her role as Lorraine, tells WHO of the compelling story-line.

In fact, in 2013 Hick was part of a group of Aboriginal actors who were refused a fare by taxi drivers in Melbourne. "Unfortunately, this isn't new to us. We have to live with this on a daily basis," she says. "So this is an important story, and it's a powerful one. I definitely feel like it's just breaking all those walls down and those barriers and stereotypes towards Aboriginal people. The audience has been able to see, 'Oh, they're just like everybody else—they're just like my family.'"

Adding to the heightened feelings on-set was the fact that it was the last time the cast and crew would work on the Logie and AACTA Award–winning show, which has run for two series (now on ABC iview). "It was emotional because we're all proud of it," says Mailman, 42. "I care about this series and what it's provided for our community."

For Hick, 24, who has a dance background, her first screen role in Redfern Now has been a chance to get to know a bit of family history: "Before I was born, my mum lived here on the Block (Redfern's block of Aboriginal-managed housing, and the scene of riots in 2004), only a couple of houses up from my character's house," she says. She hopes her next role offers a bit more glamour, saying, with a grin, "I'd love to show off that sexy sassiness that Aboriginal women do have."

■ By Alyssa Braithwaite

From left, Mailman and Hick share a moment with Promise Me director Rachel Perkins, who also worked with Mailman on her Logie-winning turn in 2013's telemovie Mabo.

"It's great that finally we have a drama series written by indigenous Australians," says Mailman.

Billionaire family tragedy

The Getty Curse
STRIKES AGAIN

TROUBLED FAMILY

Found dead in his LA mansion, eccentric heir Andrew Getty becomes the latest in his ultra-rich family to meet a dark end

Born of billion-dollar privilege, Andrew Getty could afford to indulge his many passions: he wanted to make gory horror movies. He wanted to write the world's longest palindrome (a phrase that reads the same forwards and backwards). He wanted to buy a flying car like one he had seen on YouTube. And he wanted to visit Costa Rica this month. Says his friend Alisha Lucero: "We were talking about April to see the waterfalls."

But like much in Getty's peculiar life, those plans would go unfulfilled. On March 31, the bloodied body of the 47-year-old grandson of oil tycoon J. Paul Getty was found dead in the bathroom hallway of his Hollywood Hills mansion. His body was discovered by an ex-girlfriend, Lanessa DeJonge, against whom Getty had taken out a restraining order two weeks earlier, claiming that DeJonge had attacked him with pepper spray after a fight. But police say they do not believe foul play was involved in Getty's death, and LA County Coroner's Assistant Chief Ed Winter told WHO the cause was "probably gastrointestinal bleeding." Getty had problems with drugs in the past, according to sources, and suffered from dangerously high blood pressure. Winter said that prescription drugs were found at the scene, but he believed Getty had been sober "for some time."

The sad end is the latest in a long series of tragedies to befall the Getty family, which built its $2 billion dynasty on oilfield fortunes (see box). For Andrew, that wealth "attracted people that shouldn't be around," says his friend Elan Morrison. A rotating group of house guests shared his sprawling home filled with his collection of puppets, skulls and even the skeleton of a prehistoric bird. "He was addicted to train wrecks," says another friend, Noelle Leanne. "He had this hero thing, so he would always try to help people. He was a playboy who had a big heart."

But he was haunted by his family's demons. He talked to friends about his cousin John Paul Getty III's kidnapping and death threats he said his family had received. "He was paranoid and afraid of being alone," Leanne says. Less business-focused than his forebears, he pursued a career as a director, sinking $6 million into a horror film, The Storyteller, which was never released. Behind closed doors, "he had a fetish for women's clothing," says Leanne. He bought wardrobes full of garments online and asked female guests to model them. In 2002, his then-girlfriend Tara Kersch painted a dark picture of Getty in a request for a restraining order, alleging he was addicted to crystal meth and had threatened to kill her. He "ate and drank whatever the hell he wanted," says Leanne. "He didn't go out much. He would bring the party home. It was a purely indulgent lifestyle."

> "He was paranoid and afraid of being alone"
> —Noelle Leanne

And yet, "he wasn't just this oil tycoon baby," says Morrison. "He saw people who were down and wanted to fix them. I know he wanted his own family. I think he never found what he was looking for."

A DYNASTY'S TROUBLES & SCANDALS

J. PAUL

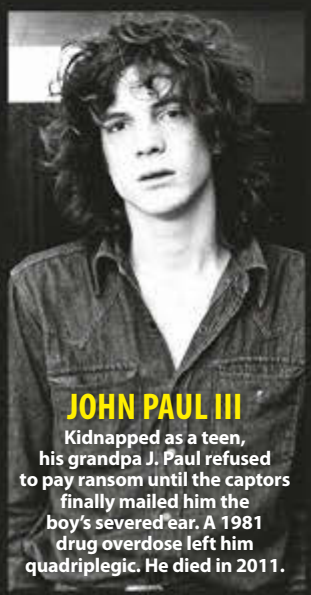

Once known as the world's richest private citizen, J. Paul amassed his fortune in the oil business. He was considered a miser and philanderer, marrying and divorcing five women, and giving relatively little to charity until his death in 1976.

GEORGE FRANKLIN

The eldest of J. Paul's children died of a lethal mix of drugs, alcohol and self-inflicted stab wounds in 1973.

JOHN PAUL III

Kidnapped as a teen, his grandpa J. Paul refused to pay ransom until the captors finally mailed him the boy's severed ear. A 1981 drug overdose left him quadriplegic. He died in 2011.

SIR JOHN PAUL JR

J. Paul Sr's third eldest and his wife, model Talitha Pol, posed for this 1969 photo (below) in Morocco. Pol died in 1971 of a heroin overdose and Getty Jr battled addiction and depression before his 2003 death.

AILEEN

Formerly wed to Elizabeth Taylor's son Christopher Wilding (above left), she has been sober for nine years and founded two charities: Get Love, to benefit the homeless, and the Aileen Getty Foundation for environmental causes.

GORDON

Andrew's father (with wife Anne) inherited the $2 billion Getty trust. In 1999 it was revealed he had three children out of wedlock.

BALTHAZAR

The actor and father of four, 40, separated from his wife Rosetta after an affair with actress Sienna Miller in 2008, but the pair later reconciled.

LIFE IN COLOUR

Stay bold, bright and colour confident this autumn/winter, with these key tips from fashion stylist Aileen Marr

AILEEN WEARS: Scanlan Theodore top and jeans. ABOVE: Aje skirt; Cos turtleneck. RIGHT: Ted Baker coat; Cos dress.

When the weather cools, we tend to stick to "safer" hues of black and grey. But a colourful wardrobe can work wonders any time of the year, according to renowned fashion stylist Aileen Marr. "Colour can improve your mood instantly," she says. To keep your look beautifully bright yet sophisticated, Marr suggests that you "colour block your outfit with shades from the same hue". She also believes that even a monochrome look can benefit from a splash of colour. Try teaming a colourful scarf or a citrus-yellow top with an otherwise all-black outfit to give your look an "instant refresh", she suggests.

WHO's guide to the latest cosmetic confections and trends With Danielle Jackson

"I genuinely love the process of getting my hair and makeup done," Kardashian West (in New York on Feb. 2) has said.

Spotlight on... KIM KARDASHIAN WEST

Lasers, lashes and rose-scented candles

How has your beauty routine changed since having [22-month-old daughter] North?
I had to make a decision this morning: wash and blow-out my hair, which takes 45 minutes, or play with my daughter. So I decided not to wash it today, and that's OK!

Is she into your makeup yet?
She can open my blush, put the brush in and put it on her cheek. Today she was opening my lipstick. She puts it up to her lips like she knows what she's doing!

Your earliest beauty memory?
Getting my nails done with my mom when I was a little girl. We would sit with her, and we were just so patient.

Any beauty secrets that might shock us?
I have the hairiest forehead you can ever imagine! In high school, I would wax it. If you Google [me in] 2008 or so, I had the craziest, hairiest hairline. Then I decided to laser it off—I didn't change the shape, just got rid of all the baby hairs.

When do you feel most beautiful?
When Mario [Dedivanovic, her long-time primping pro] has done my makeup. I could sit in a chair and not have a mirror in front of me and just walk out knowing I can trust him.

What's Kanye's favourite look on you?
He loves no makeup. We had guests the other day and I was in sweats—I was like, "I'm so sorry, guys!" He said, "Don't say that! You look so beautiful. It's how I like you best."

So what are you liking best about your look?
I love where my eyebrows are going right now. I met Anastasia [Soare, eyebrow stylist] and she was begging to do my brows. I was like, "Eh, I don't know." After she did them, it changed my life. I didn't know how different they can make your face look.

You must be a false-lash pro by now.
I don't wear them as much as I used to! And when I do, I never put them on myself. Only in an emergency.

What's your beauty fixation?
I was obsessed with roses when I was pregnant, and it never went away. I have Diptyque Roses candles all over my house.

At the 2012 Angel Ball: "Last minute, Kanye says, 'This moment needs a braid.' We did it in five minutes."

Prepping for a TV interview: on a day off, it takes "15 minutes" to get ready, she says.

All-star workout ideas

Lace up your trainers, phone a friend and get your best body ever

A dedicated exerciser, Fergie (on March 5) commits to working out six days a week.

Make it fun

Stop thinking of exercise as a chore and start taking a leaf out of Fergie's workout book. The Dutchess singer credits her love of dancing for helping her get back into shape after the birth of her son, Axl, in late 2013.

"You don't even realise you're working out because you're focusing on, 'How do I get this right?'" she says. "But you're having to control muscles so it's making you sweat."

Do it with a friend

When actress and singer Mandy Moore posted a photo of her and pal Minka Kelly after a 20km hike recently, she added that she felt "empowered and ready to take on the world." Research from Oxford University suggests that working out with a friend might boost endorphin levels more than exercising solo.

Go back to basics

The original cardio workout—running—is staging a comeback, says the New York Times, which has dubbed treadmill-based gym classes the new SoulCycle. Already pounding the Big Apple pavements are athletes such as tennis ace Caroline Wozniacki as well as actresses Teri Hatcher and 30 Rock's Katrina Bowden, who all completed the New York Marathon in 2014.

RUN ON EMPTY

No matter how you feel about seeing Madonna's near-naked butt on the red carpet, there's no denying the singer is in great shape. At least part of the credit goes to trainer Nicole Winhoffer, who worked with Madge for years.

HER TOP TIP

Always exercise first thing in the morning, before eating. "Do this for one week straight and I promise you will see change," Winhoffer says.

GREENALL'S LONDON DRY GIN

This gin has been made for 250 years, but lately it has undergone a revival. Still, it divides opinion, praised for its softer edge and gentleness or frowned at for its new livery (which we rather like). Have a G&T to welcome the arrival of the colder months. $35

IRISH CREAM COCONUT TRUFFLES

Makes 18–20 truffles

WHAT YOU NEED

- 400g good-quality white chocolate
- 2 tbsp Baileys (Irish cream liqueur)
- ⅓ cup thickened cream
- 1 cup moist coconut flakes

White chocolate and Baileys Irish Cream are great partners for these coconut-rolled handmade truffles. Make them ahead of time and store them in the fridge. They make excellent gifts—keep them in mind for Mother's Day—and are great served with tea or coffee.

1 Preheat oven to 200°C. Chop the white chocolate into small pieces, place in a medium bowl; add the Baileys and thickened cream. Place the bowl over a pot of simmering water and melt over a gentle heat (don't let the bowl touch the water). Stir till chocolate is smooth. Transfer melted chocolate to a small bowl and refrigerate for 3 hours.

2 Place the coconut on a tray and toast in the oven till golden. Set aside to cool.

3 When the truffle mix is set, scoop a tbsp worth and, using the palms of your hand, roll it into a ball, then roll the ball in the toasted coconut. Continue with remaining truffle mixture. Once all the truffles are rolled, place back in the fridge to set for 1 hour. Truffles will keep in an airtight container in the fridge for up to two weeks.

Down Under: Law (and, below, Mendelsohn).

Black Sea

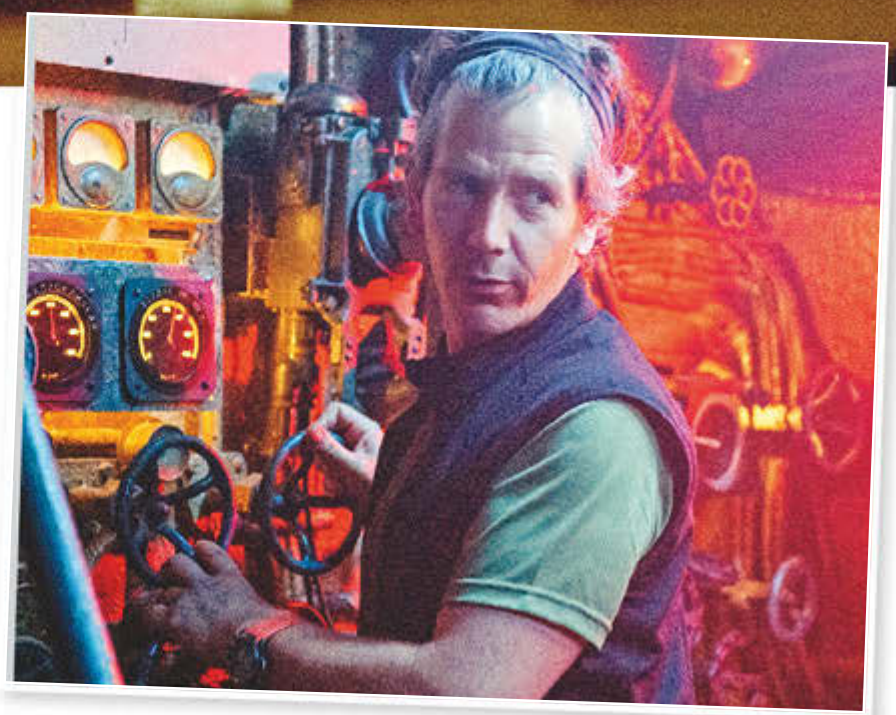

THRILLER; M, 1hr 55min

STARRING: Jude Law, Scoot McNairy, Ben Mendelsohn

Scottish naval officer turned salvage operator Robinson (Law) is a formidable man with no further stake in his life. His wife and son have already become casualties of his work. So when he is summarily laid off after 11 years, the prospect of a sunken German U-boat packed with Nazi gold on the floor of the Black Sea is a siren-like lure for Robinson and his mixed-bag Russian/British crew (McNairy is its sole, leery American, Mendelsohn an erratic Australian diver). As the men plumb watery depths in a hunk of junk submarine, their fragile alliance degenerates under the watchful eye of The Last King of Scotland director Kevin Macdonald.

For anyone who hasn't spent time in Das Boot, or any other movie sub, the squeezy dimensions of these tubular girls would test the most hardened souls. Macdonald's vessel is no different: in short order, the men are at each other's throats. They contend with the escalating jeopardy in the same flinty spirit with which they came on board while the queasy grip of their struggle, exactingly recounted as it is, grows as suffocating as a dead weight of water. ★★★☆☆

ALEX BAILEY (2)

Strange equation: Yang and Butterfield.

X+Y

DRAMA; M, 1hr 51min
STARRING: Sally Hawkins, Asa Butterfield, Rafe Spall, Eddie Marsan, Jo Yang

Before he directed his first feature, Morgan Matthews was an accomplished documentarian and it was his 2007 TV documentary Beautiful Young Minds that grew, acorn-style, into the fictionalised reality of X+Y.

Aphasia-diagnosed Nathan (Edward Baker-Close as a child, Butterfield as a teen) is a maths prodigy and behavioural riddle. Young Nathan's father, Michael (Martin McCann), was always able to reach him; after Michael's death, Nathan's mother, Julie (Hawkins), grapples with her son's monosyllabic remove, which Matthews neither heightens nor softens. Tutored by sardonic, MS-afflicted Martin Humphreys (Spall), whose disability is another imprisonment, Nathan makes the UK team at the International Mathematics Olympiad. His fellow brainiacs are multiples of cockiness but Nathan is so rattled he can barely function, which makes the triumph of his intellect and his growing closeness to a Chinese team cutie (Yang) all the more remarkable.

As Nathan struggles in a high-performance pressure cooker of supreme expectations and incomprehensible emotions, a nervy Butterfield seems racked with unmoored frustration. Hawkins, Spall and Marsan (as a domineering UK coach) are genuinely great as well, highlighting the myriad issues of autism for those locked in by it and those battling to reach them. ★★★½☆

Mommy

DRAMA; MA, 2hr 19min
STARRING: Anne Dorval, Suzanne Clément, Antoine-Olivier Pilon

Dorval

Forty-six-year-old Diane "Die" Després (Dorval) and her 15-year-old son, Steve (Pilon), are partners in defiance. The deck is stacked against them: she's a skint widow, he's foul-mouthed and ADHD-plagued, banished from a detention centre for being a destructive menace. Die loves her boy as only an indulgent maman can, but Steve is a prize butt-pain and a roll-out of disasters, and—sassy go-at-lifer though she is—Die can't cope with his elemental meltdowns. Which is where Kyla (Clément) mercifully comes in.

A fellow casualty from across the street, Kyla is as outwardly repressed by an unexplained trauma as Die is defensively brassy. Strip away her halting speech, however, and the mouseburger neighbour morphs into a spitfire. The trio find solace in each other but it's bound to be a teetering balance.

French-Canadian writer-director Xavier Dolan's charged ensemble plugs dutifully away at the overtaxed characters in this multi-award-winning ABC of affliction: Mommy never holds back from the gutsy resilience of dealing with harm done, day after screechy, abrasive, soul-sapping day. A noble salute to authenticity or souped-up, neuro-soap? Either way, it's hard work. ★★★½☆

Wyrmwood: Road of the Dead

HORROR; MA, 1hr 38min; 2014
STARRING: Jay Gallagher, Bianca Bradey

Heavily armed Australians take on the zombie hordes in this kinetic debut from sibling Sydney film-makers Kiah and Tristan Roache-Turner. Jay Gallagher stars as an Everyman who braves the undead masses to rescue his sister (Bianca Bradey) from a mad scientist (Berynn Schwerdt) with a penchant for dancing around to KC & the Sunshine Band. While featuring mucho mayhem, Wyrmwood also takes refreshing liberties with the walking-corpse playbook. In this universe, for example, you can use zombie breath to power cars. Al Gore? We've found your new favourite horror flick. ★★★½☆ —C.C.

Bale

EXODUS: GODS AND KINGS

ACTION; M, 2hr 20min; 2014
Christian Bale, Joel Edgerton

Is it possible to sit through a movie, mentally cataloging its absurdities, and still walk out dazzled? That pretty much sums up watching Ridley Scott's eye-candy spectacle Exodus, an over-the-top Old Testament epic that's essentially Gladiator with God. Before you're able to get too distracted by its flaws, Scott whips up another grand illusion. These feats climax with the parting of the Red Sea, the biggest special effect in the history of religion. ★★★☆☆ —C.N.

Gyllenhaal

NIGHTCRAWLER

CRIME; MA, 1hr 57min; 2014
Jake Gyllenhaal, Rene Russo

Gyllenhaal lost a chest-caving 14kg to play news-video cameraman Lou Bloom, who skitters across Los Angeles after sundown like an upright centipede. Lou, a borderline personality with a frightening drive for self-promotion, will do anything to get footage of crimes and accidents. He also makes a monkey out of Russo, as a news editor who banks on his voyeurism and underestimates his game. The movie is a blast. ★★★★☆ —T.G.

Surly

THE NUT JOB

ANIMATION; PG, 1hr 25min; 2014
Will Arnett, Liam Neeson

There isn't a whole lot to recommend in this uninspired animated adventure about a squirrel, Surly (voiced by the aptly snarky Arnett), who knocks over a nut shop to feed his rodent pals. Some flashy talents lend their tonsils to the tepid tale, including Brendan Fraser, and Katherine Heigl, but only Neeson seems interested in actually earning his pay cheque as a deliciously Machiavellian raccoon. He's like the Darth Vader of varmints. ★★☆☆☆ —C.N.

The teddy from Darkest Peru gets a gloriously whimsical big-screen debut that's closer to the madcap spirit of the Muppets than to standard multiplex family fodder. ★★★★☆

WHAT TO WATCH

Poldark

Broody good: Turner.

DRAMA Sun., April 12, 8.40 PM; ABC
STARRING: Aidan Turner, Heida Reed

Not since Mr Darcy strode from the pages of Pride and Prejudice has dark and brooding been so attractive: in another literary adaptation, this of the first two of Winston Graham's series of Poldark novels, Turner stars as Ross Poldark, who has plenty to be dark and broody about. He returns from near death on the battlefield, fighting the rebels in the American War of Independence, to find his family home in a state of great disrepair, his family mine abandoned and his beloved, Elizabeth (Reida), engaged to his cousin. But you can't keep a good Poldark down and so, with a swirl of his coat, he sets out to regain all that was once his.

I loved the Poldark books as a soppy teen and this eight-part BBC production does a good job with the melodramatic heartbreaks depicted against a backdrop of sweeping Cornwall vistas and grubby churls eking out a miserable existence. Eleanor Tomlinson's Demelza, the wilful chit who will come to rival Elizabeth for Ross's heart, is yet to blossom. Till then I'll keep believing he's mine. ★★★½☆

Still in the Game: Headey as Queen Cersei.

Game of Thrones

DRAMA Mon., April 13, 11 AM; Showcase
STARRING: Lena Headey

Following Joffrey's death, the throne is occupied by timid Tommen (Dean-Charles Chapman) and the Lannister family has been declawed. Luckily, we still have Cersei (Headey), whose mental state just keeps getting richer. With her father dead, she is more ambitious than ever, and it's fascinating to watch: the queen who claimed power as her birthright is now a leader who actually earns it. A flashback shows a psychic revealing her children will all die, and a younger queen will take her place. Who that is remains to be seen, but if Tommen is not long for this world, maybe this season isn't the slow burn it seems. The throne may soon be back in play. In which case: Game on. ★★★½☆ —Melissa Maerz

Wolf Hall

DRAMA Sat., April 11, 8.30 PM; BBC First
STARRING: Mark Rylance, Damian Lewis, Claire Foy

Anne (Foy) plots to keep a head.

Thomas Cromwell (Rylance) was the clever politico whose ambition helped ensure Henry VIII's Henry VIII-ness. But like the Hilary Mantel novels it is based on, this six-parter brings the statesman's shady story to light with wit, empathy and even surprise. Sure, we know everyone's fate—including Henry (Lewis) and Anne Boleyn (Foy)—but the intrigue is gripping, especially when Cromwell battles rival Thomas More (Anton Lesser). ★★★★☆ —Ray Rahman

Marco Polo's REMY HII

The former* Neighbours actor and Logie-winner for the acclaimed Better Man *stars in the Weinstein-produced Netflix series.

How's playing a prince? "No complaints! The wardrobe was a step up from my daily wear, and the white horse came standard. Kind of like a company car."

When did you know you weren't on Ramsay St anymore? "Sitting in front of an army of 300 with the Kazakhstan mountains behind us was a good indication I was a long, long way from Erinsborough."

Working with TV game-changer Netflix has been a dream come true, says Hii.

Kendrick Lamar

TO PIMP A BUTTERFLY

Interscope/Universal

How far outside the boundaries of hip-hop has Kendrick Lamar ventured? Well, at times he's not even rapping—he's spouting beat poetry at a breakneck pace, seemingly without the need for oxygen. On the 12-minute closing track, "Mortal Man", he samples a 1994 interview with the late Tupac Shakur and strips in his own questions. Elsewhere, To Pimp a Butterfly is simply content to mash up 1970s P-Funk and '90s G-funk, Sly Stone and Prince, rubbery nu-soul and freaky free jazz. The 27-year-old used 2012's good kid, m.A.A.d city to tell his story of growing up in Los Angeles's notorious Compton neighbourhood. This album goes both outwards and inwards from there, taking on big questions of race ("Blacker the Berry", "King Kunta") and beating himself up as he questions his own life ("u", "How Much a Dollar Cost"). He can be angry with the world one moment, angry with himself the next, on a 79-minute opus that's densely packed lyrically and full of whiplash-inducing turns musically. If there's a more audacious hip-hop album released in 2015, then this will be an exceptional year indeed. ★★★★½

Lamar floats like a Butterfly, stings like a bee.

Brian Wilson

NO PIER PRESSURE

Capitol/EMI

Is it possible to be a guest on your own album? Sure sounds like it on the Beach Boy's 11th solo disc. That's Zooey Deschanel singing lead on "On the Island". And Kacey Musgraves on "Guess You Had to Be There". And fun's Nate Ruess on "Saturday Night", which is the best song of a less-than-great bunch. Wilson does venture to the microphone, but his mix of past-glory retreads ("Sail Away") and garish "Kokomo"-style 1980s cheese ("It's a Beautiful Day") makes No Pier Pressure a near wipe-out. ★★☆☆☆

The Mountain Goats

BEAT THE CHAMP

Merge/Remote Control

Do you really want to listen to a concept album about wrestling? Yes, you do. John Darnielle of the Mountain Goats is such a skilled writer that these songs are about much more than pumped-up dudes in tights hurling each other around a ring. Instead, they become powerful and touching tales about good and evil, hopes and disappointments and the masks we wear to disguise who we really are. With the band mixing up rousing indie rock with jazzy piano and horns, you'll be down for the count. ★★★★½

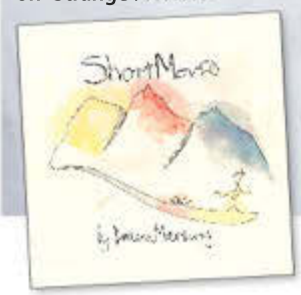

Laura Marling

SHORT MOVIE

Virgin/Caroline

Yes, that's an electric guitar Marling is playing. The critically acclaimed English indie-folk singer's weapon of choice has always been an acoustic guitar. Her fifth album—at the tender age of 25—opens with slowly building feedback, but soon enough it's back to familiar delicate finger-picking and vocals that split the difference between Nick Drake and Joni Mitchell. "I'm taking more risks now," she declares on "How Can I". There's a PJ Harvey influence on "False Hope", singing about a New York black-out on a slice of cool rock, while she encroaches on Patti Smith territory on "Gurdjeff's Daughter" and dabbles in some spoken-word on "Strange". ★★★½☆

Plugged-in: Marling cautiously turns things up.

What your stars say this week, April 13–19. By Penny Thornton

ARIES

MARCH 21–APRIL 19

These have been a tough few weeks for the Aries clan, but you are on the road to recovery. Saturn's position is helping you make long-term plans and in mid-to-late April you may well be able to set in stone a part of that agenda. If you are serious about your ideas, now is the time to share them with those who can help manifest them. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Normally, you are a practical, cautious individual, but you may have allowed your hopes to interfere with the reality: you may have glossed over anomalies or given someone too much licence. Now you must look at the situation in the cold light of dawn, and decide whether it is worth piling more money, time and emotion into it. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Maybe it looks as though someone has let you down or been hard on you, or perhaps not enough care was taken at the beginning of this working or intimate relationship to ensure that everyone concerned knew what was expected of him or her. Nurse your bruises, but do not necessarily give up. This is a pause, not a full stop. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Do your best not to take someone's actions personally: if a situation cannot move forward, there is a good reason and it may have nothing whatsoever to do with you or your efforts. On April 17 Pluto begins its retrograde passage, so during the next few months hidden factors may well come to light that explain the current hiatus. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

LEO

JULY 23–AUG. 22

Signs of distress give you an opportunity to set things on a better course, so prepare to negotiate. Finance and creative endeavours are the areas that require your focus, but people and projects far away, whether in terms of miles or time, are also worthy of attention. Sometimes you have to go further than you think to get what you want. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

VIRGO

AUG. 23–SEPT. 22

Clarity is essential. If you are entering a new relationship, be sure the person can live up to his or her claims, and if you are provided with information about someone, check the facts before giving more oxygen to the story. You can cement a relationship now but if someone is going to let you down in the future, surely it's better you know now? For more, phone 1902 261 655.

LIBRA

SEPT. 23–OCT. 22

Venus–Saturn aspects can help put a love affair or a business relationship on a long-term footing and can inspire the kind of reality that makes you stronger and wiser. And given that these past few weeks have been challenging, the current patterns are at least an improvement. Pick yourself up, dust yourself off. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

SCORPIO

OCT. 23–NOV. 21

A stitch in time has saved many a Scorpio, so if a situation fails to deliver, rather than cut your losses or surround yourself in permafrost examine the facts and set to work. Don't let your imagination run away with you; this is the time to be realistic and to try new ways to get the results you want. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

SAGITTARIUS

NOV. 22–DEC. 20

Venus makes its first opposition to Saturn in your sign for almost 30 years. If you are ready to make a big commitment, go for it. But if you are doubting a relationship's ability to improve, then face facts and discuss how to disentangle yourself without incurring too much heartache and financial penalties. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

CAPRICORN

DEC. 21–JAN. 19

If you are debating doing something that could make a positive difference to your life, don't just think about it. Even if plans do not work out precisely as hoped, you will have gained from the experience; plus, you can pull the plug should the situation become unworkable. Take a leap of faith. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

AQUARIUS

JAN. 20–FEB. 18

A relationship can be cemented now, a plan confirmed, but if you receive a rejection there is no point in trying to reverse things now. It may be possible in the future to get the situation back on track, but it will need time and some considerable reworking. And maybe, just maybe, it is better to let go. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

PISCES

FEB. 19–MARCH 20

For affairs of the heart, while you cannot put a veneer over lies, deceit and plain bad behaviour, you must be sure of the facts. And should you be about to marry or move in with a partner, you cannot do so with doubts and fears in your mind. Go deep within yourself for the answers and when you make a decision do so in full consciousness. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

THE LAST WORD

MATTHEW PERRY

LAST TIME I TOOK PUBLIC TRANSPORT

When I went to see the movie Fletch in 1985. I took the bus to the Sherman Oaks Galleria and back. But, of course, I was just on a plane three days ago. I like to indulge my fellow passengers in conversation, and then I watch movies. Although sometimes you just need to sleep.

LAST TV OBSESSION

Lost. I watched every episode and would sit there yelling at the TV. I really haven't gotten hooked like that on another show since.

LAST HOME-DECORATING PURCHASE

I saw a picture of a sports ticker tape in a house, and I said, "You can have one of these at home?" So I bought one. I got mine first, but now [my Odd Couple character] Oscar has one, too.

LAST MEAL I HAD

A grilled-cheese sandwich. I don't make them often, but I make a good one. When I cut it in half, I make perfectly straight lines. It's usually a last-minute kind of meal, but it's really the only thing I can make.

LAST HOLIDAY

I recently went to Cabo San Lucas, Mexico, for about a week, and it was lovely. I try to go down there a lot because it's close. It's nice and I just read and relax.

The Odd Couple airs on Mondays at 7.30 PM on Ten.

Perry (left) plays The Odd Couple's Oscar Madison to Thomas Lennon's Felix Unger.

"It's basically night and day," says Mendelsohn of his US career success after Animal Kingdom. He also stars in the new movie thriller Black Sea (review, p. 73).

BEN MENDELSOHN

He has played the bad guy for over two decades, with chilling turns in The Dark Knight Rises, Killing Them Softly and his US breakthrough role as psychopath Andrew "Pope" Cody in 2010's Animal Kingdom. Now, the Melburnian is channelling his dark side as Danny Rayburn, the black-sheep older brother in Netflix's new family thriller Bloodline. The actor, 46, who is based in LA with his wife, English author Emma Forrest, spoke to WHO's Alicia Neil while in Sydney on March 24 to launch the online streaming service in Australia.

With your film career on fire in the US, what brought you back to TV?
I think the quality that's going on in the TV landscape. Netflix is an exciting spot to be. Its global viewership is enormous, so for someone like me, that's pretty good!

Mendelsohn (left) and Friday Night Lights star Kyle Chandler play siblings in Bloodline, from the creative team behind Damages.

And if you go to work and Sissy Spacek is playing your mum, you know it's a pretty serious football ground you're playing on.

Do you learn anything from working with seasoned stars like Sissy and Sam Shepard, who play your parents in Bloodline?
That really lifts your game—you don't want to get left behind. Everyone tends to get better. And there are a few scenes that were difficult in terms of family conflict, so you've got to get to know each other pretty quickly.

Did you bond over a bottle of wine?
There were some nights and there were some days—Florida is good for both. We'd go out, there would be long barbecue sessions, the police coming around every now and then ...

Your haunted character Danny has returned home and threatened to expose his family's skeletons. What draws you to darker roles?
I think it's more that they tend to gravitate towards me. But I'm very flattered—there's something about the difficult characters, if you like, that has a way of grabbing people's attention.

Did Bloodline's setting in the Florida Keys influence your performance?
The tropical Keys have a long, chequered history, with a lot of dodginess that's gone down over a very, very long time. And you can feel that after a while, being there. The place was a character in its own way.

How do you stay grounded in LA?
It's like, "Move along, there's nothing to see here." The paparazzi are not so interested in my life and that's not a bad thing. I've just been working away. But I'm not settled-settled in LA. Australia is still home.

New faces

Filming Zoolander 2 in Rome on April 1, Kristen Wiig (left) debuted a really ridiculous style. Meanwhile in Vancouver, Ryan Reynolds (right) was incognito as Wade Wilson, the scar-faced alter ego of Deadpool in his new film.

Bondi Rescue airs Tuesdays at 8 PM on Ten.

MUPPET MANIA

'Sesame Street' is apparently the new Paris or Milan

DEBRA MESSING
Hopefully 'The Mysteries of Laura' star can also solve Grover's 'Monster at the End of This Book' mystery.

NICK JONAS
We've always said it about the singer—he's an Animal.

RIHANNA
She's a part-time Oscar the Grouch, but with better digs.

MILEY CYRUS
She's not as tall as Big Bird but she certainly rocks his plumage.

SPOTLIGHT ON... Anthony Glick

The buff South African, 21, is the latest recruit on 'Bondi Rescue'

He's one of four new lifeguards patrolling Sydney's Bondi Beach

When I got the job, my hands were shaking. It's sought after, so I'm making the most of it. Things happen in threes on the beach, so you have to be 100 per cent vigilant at all times. I've done a few rescues and I'm proud to tell my family. Even one or two drownings a decade is too many.

He's super fit

I train six days a week. I'll go to the gym, then for a soft-sand run on Bondi Beach, then for a swim and then a surf. But I think it's important to have the seventh day to rest and re-energise.

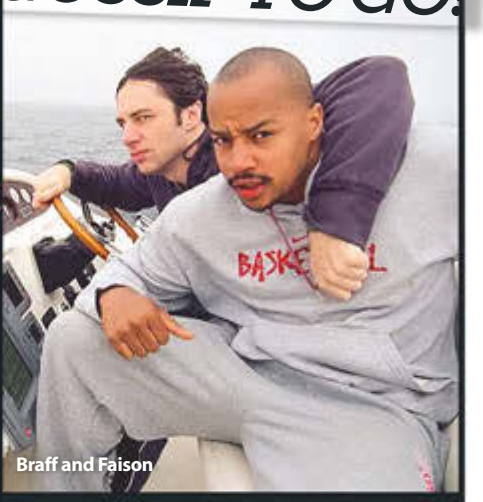

He can cook:

I know exactly what's going into my body as it's important that I'm always feeling well. I don't believe in diets, but I feel great eating healthily 85 per cent of the time. For breakfast, I make pancakes with three eggs, a banana, cinnamon, oats, chia seeds and spread with natural peanut-butter, banana, honey and nuts.

He's a talented snapper

Photography is the other half of my life. I document what's happening at Bondi, like the weather, waves and sunsets. I wake up before sunrise and do it in my lunch break and after work. I always want to get out of bed knowing that I'm going to do something I love.

PIZZA PALS

Bromance icons and Scrubs co-stars Zach Braff and Donald Faison have led celeb reaction to the US state of Indiana's religious freedom bill that critics fear could discriminate against gay customers. "If you really and truly want pizza for your gay wedding in Indiana ... We will make it for you," Braff promised in a tweet on April 3 (above). Miley Cyrus, Rihanna and Ashton Kutcher have also spoken against the bill.

Leonardo DiCaprio knows what he likes on the girlfriend front. DiCaprio has been spotted getting very close to Rohrbach at Los Angeles club 1Oak, before being seen again with the Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Edition's 2015 "Rookie of the Year" beauty at another club days later.

Renner reaches divorce agreement

The heated divorce battle between Jeremy Renner and Sonni Pacheco is winding down, as the pair have agreed to terms for child custody and support. The Avengers: Age of Ultron actor, 44, will get joint custody of his 2-year-old daughter, Ava, despite Pacheco, 23, having petitioned for primary custody. He will also pay $US13,000 a month in child support, according to court documents. The actor will not pay spousal support, which Pacheco had also been seeking, having claimed that their prenuptial agreement should be voided because it was based on "fraud." Renner and Pacheco were married for only 10 months; the Canadian model cited irreconcilable differences in filing for divorce in December.
